NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, Pons Ælii, afterwards Monkchester, a parl. & munic. bor., town, & riverport of England, cap. co. Northumberland, & a co. of itself, on the N. bank of the Tyne, across which it communicates with Gateshead by a bridge of 9 arches, 53 m. N.E. Carlisle; also with a station on the Great Northumberland railroad, & 16½ m. N. Durham. Area of town & co. 1851, 2,870 ac. Pop. 1,536; of parl. bor. 87,784. It stands mostly on declivities rising steeply from the vicinity of the river, & early in the present century it consisted of little more than a collection of narrow, ill-built, & inconvenient streets; but within the last twenty-five years it has been rendered one of the handsomest towns in England, by the enterprise of Mr Grainger, a builder & native of the town, whose improvements are conjectured to have cost between one & two millions sterling. The public market, occupying nearly 3 acres; the new exchange, with 3 Corinthian fronts, & containing a news room & exhibition rooms of the N. of England Society of Fine Arts; the theatre, new music hall, arcade, a long Corinthian edifice, occupied by banks, public offices, auction rooms, & chambers, are also works by Mr Grainger; & at the head of Grey Street is a column 136 feet in height, supporting a statue of Earl Grey, by Bailey. The Moot hall, or Assize court for the co. Northumberland, in the style of the Temple of Theseus at Athens; the guild hall & old exchange, mansion-house, custom-house, police office, town jail. Pandon Dean bridge, across a deep glen; the public baths, assembly rooms, racket court, & barracks for 1,000 men, are among the principal public edifices. St. Nicholas' church, in the decorated English style, & 220 feet in length, has an elegant steeple 201 feet in height; St. Andrew's & St. John's, are both interesting edifices, & the former has an altar piece by Giordano. All Saints' is a handsome modern Grecian structure, with a spire 202 feet in height; St Thomas' chapel, the Scotch church, the Roman Catholic, & several Methodist chapels, are worthy of notice. The houses of worship in 1851 amounted to 51, viz., 7 Baptist, 11 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 2 Independents, 1 Jews synagogue, 15 Methodist, 1 New church, 7 Presbyterian, 2 Roman Catholic, 2 Unitarian, & 2 Isolated congregations. The wall of Hadrian passed through the site of the town, & several of its remaining towers are employed for halls of corporate trades. The castle, whence the town derives its name, is a superior structure, founded by Robert of Normandy; & in the time of the historian Leland, Newcastle was the most strongly defended town in England. It is now chiefly noted as the principal centre of the English coal trade. Within a radius of 8 m. 50 coal pits are wrought; and in 1853, 2,157,273 tons of coal, & 18,584 tons of coke were shipped coastwise; & 1,054,685 tons of coal, & 79,-233 tons of coke exported to foreign countries, besides the amount sent by railroads. Extensive manufs. of bottle & window glass, steam & other machinery; leather, soap, iron wares, sheet lead, & chemical products, with ship & boat building, rope & sail making, malting, brewing, &c., are carried on; & metal from the Stanhope mines, bricks, tar, & grindstones are among the exports. The port comprises all the navigation of the Tyne, with Seaton sluice & Blyth creeks. It communicates by large steam vessels with Leith, Berwick, Whitby, Scarboro', Hull, & London; by the Great North of England railroad with Darlington & York; North British with Scotland, & by other railroads with Shields & Sunderland. Newcastle is the seat of literary & philosophical, natural history, antiquarian, law, medical, botanical, & other societies, of one of the provincial medical schools in England, a Trinity house, a royal grammar school, numerous other institutions for education, a large infirmary, a dispensary, lying-in-hospital, lunatic asylum, a great variety of endowed charities, quarter & petty sessions, mayor's, sheriff's, conscience, & river courts, & assizes & quarter sessions for Northumberland. It sends 2 members to H. of C.—II. (Under Lyme, or Lyne), a parl. & munic. bor., town, & pa., co. & 15 m. N.N.W. Stafford, & about 4 miles N.E. the Whitmore station of the London & North Western railroad. Area of pa. 554 ac. Pop 1851, 10,290; do of the town 10,569. Houses mostly ancient, but streets paved. It has 2 churches, a very handsome Roman Catholic chapel, a grammar school, founded in the reign of Elizabeth; alms-houses, & numerous other charities; a guild hall, market house, theatre, public library, literary institution, public promenade, union workhouse; extensive manufactures of hats, some silk & cotton factories, & in the vicinity potteries, iron works, & large collieries. A branch canal connects it with the Grand Trunk navigation. Markets, Monday & Saturday. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. It is a polling place for the co., & gives the title of Duke to the Pelham-Clinton family. Of the castle built here by the Earl of Chester, in 1180, & whence the town takes its name, but slight traces remain. Near it is Trentham, the seat of the Duke of Sutherland—III. a pa. of S. Wales, co. Glamorgan, adjoining Bridgend. Pop. 1,239—IV. (Little), a pa., co. Pembroke. 9 m. N. Haverfordwest. Area, 2,712 ac. Pop. 433.—V. (In Emlyn), a market town of S. Wales, co. Carmarthen, pa. Kenworth, delightfully situated on the Teify, 9 m. S.E. Cardigan. Pop. 1,049. It has a union workhouse, & ruins of a castle.

Shape very irregular, & shores greatly indented. The country in the E. is generally low, W.ward more rugged & mountainous, & especially so in a peninsula which extends from the N. toward Labrador; principal navigable rivers, the Humber & the river of Exploits, which latter rises in lake Bathurst, one of several considerable lakes in the interior. Climate in the winter very severe, the thermometer frequently falling to 30° below the freezing point; in summer there is a brief hot season; the colony is generally healthy. Surface mostly marshy, or covered with a scrubby vegetation, & the soil is ill-suited to agriculture. Kitchen vegetables are accordingly the principal crops raised; pasturage is however plentiful, & the plains abound with vast herds of carriboa deer, which, with the famous Newfoundland breed of dogs, wolves, bears, foxes, & some beavers, constitute the prev. animals. Timber is scarce, the principal resources of the population are in the cod, seal, & salmon fisheries, the chief fishing grounds being off the S. E. coast. The great bank of Newfoundland on this side, is the most extensive submarine plateau yet discovered, being about 600 m. in length, & in some places 200 miles in breadth, with a depth, varying from 25 to 95 fathoms, & a bottom of solid rock. The principal fishing ground is over this bank between lat. 42° & 46° N. In 1851, the exports from Newfoundland comprised 1,017,674 quintals of dried fish, valued at 493,014*l.*; 2,744,910 gals. of oil, valued at 319,977*l.*; 511,630 seal skins, valued at 76,-596*l.*; 4,025 tierces of salmon, valued at 12,024*l.*; 36,-259 barrels of herrings, valued at 18,261*l.* Imports 1851, valued at 943,191*l.*; exports, 959,751*l.* Ships owned in the colony 31st Dec. 1851, 830, agg. 52,078 tons burden; in the year 1851, 38 ships were built with an aggregate tonnage of 1,806 tons. In 1852, there were 281 ships engaged in the seal fishery, manned by 10,558 men. Revenue 1851, 80,395*l.* Expenditures same year, 75,770*l.* Legislature composed of the Lt. Governor, a Legislative council of 8 members, & a House of Assembly of 15 members. (Salary of Gov. & Com.-in-Chief 3,000*l.*) The colony has lately been erected into a Protestant see, but most of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. St. Johns, the cap., on the S.E. coast, is the only town worthy of notice.

By the census of 1851, it appears that the number of inhabitants was 2,243,054, not including the savage Indians. The population in 1843 was 1,932,279. According to the census of 1835, it was 1,685,073. Within the last sixteen years it has increased 557,916, not by immigration, because the small number of persons who have come in, hardly equals that of the emigrants. In 1810, when the revolution commenced, there were scarcely 800,000 inhabitants; in 1826 there were 1,500,000. The first twenty-four years of that period were those of the war of independence, in which there was a very great loss of life. It appears that in 1835 the population has doubled. From that epoch to the present, sixteen years, it had increased 33 per cent. or 1½ per cent. every eight years.

The race of men which inhabited New Granada before the fifteenth century, belongs to the American type. The nations on the Atlantic coasts, from Chiriqui on the coast of Veraguas to Goajira, were, without doubt, of the Carib race, which is very similar to the Brasilo-guaramensian, to which belong the nations in the east of New Granada, as far as the eastern cordillera, & the Mocoas, Sebondoyes, Pastuzos, Almagueraños & Patias. Those which inhabited the province of Túquerres belonged to the Ando-Peruvian race. The nations of Chocó, the interior of Antióquia, Cauca, Popayan & Neiva possessed, & still preserve, characteristics more resembling those of the Aztecs than any other race. The Muiscas differed from the rest; and their pusillanimous character most assimilated them to the Ando-Peruvians. Several nations are still found in the savage state, the principal of which are the Mesayas, Caquetás, Choquees, Mocoas, Omaguas, Enaguas, Amarizanos, Guipanabis, Macucúes, Guahibos & Andaquies, in the eastern part of the republic: the Goajiros, Motilones, Guainetas & Cocinas, in the provinces of Rio Hacha, Upar & Santa-Marta; & the Dariens, Cunas & Chocoes, on the banks & affluents of the Atrato & coast of Darien. The other nations are insignificant hordes, or have been reduced to the social state; but some preserve their languages, especially among the Noánamos in Chocó, the Coconucos in Popayan, the Paeses & old Pijaos in Popayan & Neiva, & the Sebondoyes & Mocoas in the territory of Mocoa. The Muiscas & Almaguereños, like the Calamares of Carthagena & Santa Marta, who are reduced to Granadan society, have lost their original languages. The savage Indians in the territory of Mocoa & Canton, of San Martin, Province of Bogotá, are between 70,000 & 75,000 in number, those of Goajira, 18,000, & 20,000 in Upar, Ocaña, Santa Marta & Opon; in Socorro 2,000 & 3,000; in the provinces of Chocó, Antióquia & Mompoz, 5,000 & 6,000; in Darien & the Isthmus, 4,000 & 5,000; & in Casanare, 8,000 & 10,000: total, from 105,000 to 120,000.

In none of the other countries of South America is to be found a more varied physical aspect. This is due to the triple number of Cordilleras & various ramifications formed by the great chain of the Andes in New Granada. The great chain, which, in crossing Bolivia & Peru, divides into three principal branches, when it reaches Ecuador, unites itself into one great mass, which forms basins, or high valleys, which show the crests of two chains, called the Eastern & Western; & in this form it reaches the south of New Granada, in the Province of Tuquerres. The elevation of that province is such, that there is hardly a terrace of the same extent in the world, at an equal altitude. The mass of the Cordilleras retains the same aspect as far as the territory of Pasto, where the two rivers Juanambu & Janacatu form another basin nearly parallel to the Guaitara, leaving in the centre a great mass, which unites the Eastern & Western branches, & in the centre of which is the lofty mountain of the volcano of Pasto. Another high, cold, windy branch of the Cordillera extends from the paramo of Aponte, in the eastern Cordillera, which runs east to west between Juanambu & the river Mayo, & terminates at the confluence of those rivers with the Patia, where all united burst through the western Cordillera, to carry their waters to the Pacific. This is the point at which the Cordillera of the Andes loses, in its western branch, its magnificent aspect & Alpine elevation, & begins to form the variegated valleys of the interior of New Granada. From the Mayo the valley of Patia has its source, between the two Cordilleras to the little heights of Popayan, called the Cuchilla, which meet the two

Cordilleras by a ridge from 900 to 1,000 toises above the level of the sea, in 2° 24′ N. lat. The great mass of the Eastern Cordillera has a direction from south to north-east, forming a spur, or great promontory from 1° to 1° 30′ N. lat., between 76° 20′ & 76° 40′ W. lon., where another division of the Cordillera of the Andes has its origin, & the three great branches in New Granada are formed. That point is of great physical importance, as there are situated several lakes, the principal of which is that of Las Papas, which give rise to the rivers Caqueta, Magdalena, Cauca & Guachicono. The Caqueta flows towards the south-east, which direction it keeps until it joins the Amazon, under the name of the Yapura. The head streams of the Magdalena & of the Suása flow north-east, & begin to form the waters of the valley of Neiva. The Cauca flows north on the Corderilla, until it reaches the Sierra Nevada (or snowy range) of the Coconucos, on a high terrace called Paletara; &, its course being impeded, it turns, inclining to the west, to descend to Popayan, & give rise to the valleys of the Cauca. The Guachicono first runs north-west, & then west & south-west, to form the Patia, whose waters fall into the Pacific; while the Magdalena & the Cauca pass through the whole territory of New Granada, from south to north, and unite in the Province of Mompox, to bear their waters to the Caribbean Sea; those of the Caqueta, lost in the Amazon, flow into the Atlantic by the eastern part of the Continent; & those of the Guachicono, united with the Patia, fall into the Pacific. There is scarcely in the world so important a point in physical geography, as the great knot of the cordillera of the Andes, where its eastern chain divides in two, giving origin to the central branch, which separates the valleys of Cauca from those of Neiva & Maraquiti. The Eastern Cordillera follows its direction towards the north-east, to the paramos of Pamplona, the boundary of New Granada & Venezuela, & where another branch separates itself, to form the Sierra Nevada (or snowy region) of Santa Marta, & extends by Perija to the Peninsula of Goajira. The central branch, which begins to separate itself from the eastern in the Papas, completes its separation in the volcano of Purace, & proceeds parallel to the waters of the Cauca & Magdalena, to the end of the valley of the Cauca, where it unites again with the western Cordillera, in north latitude 4° 50′, & where the Cordillera is cut by the basins of the San Jorge, the Cauca, the Atrato & the San Juan, giving all that country a peculiar aspect, & where are found the richest gold mines in New Granada. The branches which run between the Magdalena & the Cauca, are lost at the confluence of those rivers above Mompox. Others extend to the Gulf of Guacuba in Darien, the mouth of the Atrato; & the western branch, depressed, so to speak, by the waters of the Atrato, San Juan, Baudo, & San Miguel, loses its gigantic height, and offers, at different points, an easy passage from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the most remarkable of these being that of Panama, where a railroad has been constructed from Colon to Panama; as may be done from San Miguel or Cupica; between the Atrato & San Juan, which will be easily made, or between the Atrato and the Baudo; at which points the cordillera of the Andes absolutely loses its type, & is a mere agglomeration of hills, cut through by the waters. In passing through the Isthmus of Darien, & that of Panama, the western cordillera inclines to the north, & parallel to the coast of the Atlantic, extends through the states of Central America. The physical aspect of each range may be said to be preserved in the central & eastern branches, for there are found the snowy regions of Chiles and Cumbal, in the Province of Tuquerres, the volcano of Pasto, whose summit reaches the region of perpetual ice; the paramo* of Sotara, a volcano almost extinct, whose top is covered with snow a portion of the year; the snowy cordillera of Coconucos, which consists of five large mountains, the most western of which is known as the Purace, & contains the volcano of that name, which in 1849 lost its summit & opened a crater 80 or 100 metres in diameter. Proceeding by the central branch, we find the snowy regions of Huila, Tolima & Ruiz. The eastern cordillera, although it rises to the region of perpetual snow in some places, has no snowy regions in the interior, but only at its extremity, in the provinces of Santa Marta & Rio Hacha. The eastern cordillera of New Granada, from the heights of Mocoa above San Miguel & Rio de Oro, to the paramo of Pamplona, is the first element of the great eastern basins of the Caqueta, Guainia & Meta, which join those of the Rio Negro, Amazon & Orinoco. The basin of the Caqueta is surrounded from the southern part, by the branch of the cordillera which descends from the eastern, from the origin of San Miguel until it disappears in the Amazon, between the rivers Napo of the Ecuador & Putumayo of New Granada; by the east the cordillera of Aracuara, & by the north that of Tunahi, which rises in the Andes, & divides the basin of Guainia or Rio Negro. This basin bears these two names, because the Rio Negro is called the Guiania until its confluence with the natural course of the Casiquiare, & is separated from the basin of the Meta by the mountains of the river Guavire, in which the river Inirida has its source, & on the east by the mountains which give rise to the river Atabapo, which flows through only Granadan territory. The basin of the Meta, which is the largest, follows the preceding, and may be considered as a part of the great basin of the Orinoco. In the south, there is not, properly speaking, any basin except that of the Patia, formed by the eastern & western cordilleras, & the branches of the Cuchilla & Berruecos in the north & south. The basin of the Cauca forms two beautiful valleys, from Popayan to Cartago, & is circumscribed by the central & western cordilleras, both which unite, near the fifth degree of north latitude. This agglomeration of mountains possesses very peculiar forms, as it has neither tablelands like those of Tuquerres, Bogotá or Tunja, nor valleys by which the course of cordilleras may be determined. The extent is rather more than two degrees of longitude & three of latitude; which, with the chasms & elevations of the land, give about 18,200 sq. miles, or at least 18,000, in the part comprehending the Provinces of Cordoba, Medellan, & Antioquia, which forms the mountainous basin of the Cauca, & in whose heights rise the rivers Samana or Miel, & Nare, tributaries of the Magdalena; the Nechi, & San Jorge, or St. George, tributaries of the Cauca; & the Guacuba, a tributary of the Atrato. On the western part is formed the mountainous basin of the Choco, cut by the San Juan, Baudo & San Miguel, flowing to the Pacific, & the Atrato running into the Atlantic, mingling its waters in the Gulf of Darien, with those of the Napipi & Guacuba. This basin is completely covered with forests of the thickest vegetation, under which are rich mines of gold & platina. The central division of the country, the basin of the Magdalena, is formed by the great eastern & central cordilleras, where they separate in the paramo of Las Papas, until they reach the plains of the Atlantic, in the littoral provinces; this basin comprehends the beautiful valleys of Neiva & Mariquita, & that of the lower Magdalena, all which are bathed by the river of that name & its branches. The rest of the territory between the eastern basin, & that we have described, is a continuation of elevated table-lands in the cordillera, until we reach the borders of Venezuela. The basin of Guanenta, formed by the rivers Suarez & Sogamosa, forms the territory northwest of Bogotá, between the great eastern cordillera, & the branch which springs from it & runs parallel to the Magdalena, & afterwards turns east, to mingle with the mountain of Perija, forming two small basins in the provinces of Ocaña & Upar. The remaining territory of the republic consists of the plains of the Atlantic, between Goajira & the Gulf of Darien; the savannahs of Chiriqui, in the western provinces of the Isthmus & the shores of the Pacific & Atlantic, where several branches of the western cordillera sink in the waters of the two oceans.

* It has been found convenient in the translation, to transfer from the original the Spanish word "paramo," which is commonly translated desert, but, as is used in New Granada, has no exact equivalent in English. It signifies an elevated region, cold, windy, barren and uninhabitable.

The principal rivers are first, Caquetá, rising in the eastern cordilleras, & flowing through the whole territory until its confluence with the Amazon. Its largest branches are the Pescado, the Caguan, & the Apoponi. The Guainia, which is the Upper Rio Negro, & by the caño, or natural channel of Casiquiare, allows internal navigation between the Orinoco & the Amazon, has many branches in the territory of New Granada, but none of importance. The Putumayo, the most S., pours its waters into the Amazon, where it is called the Solimoes, has for its principal affluent the Sotuya. Next, N. of the Guainia, is the beautiful Guaviare, formed of it & the Guayavero; & its chief tributaries are the Inirida, which descends from the mountains of Tunahi, & the Atabapo, from the heights between the Orinoco and the Rio Negro, as an independent group of the chains of the cordilleras which we have described. Next this river is the Meta, which joins the Orinoco, & receives various affluents from the great cordillera, of which we will mention only the Chire, Casanare, & Lipa. The river Vichada is the largest tributary of the Orinoco, not mixing its waters with the Meta or Guaviare. The Magdalena is the stream which has the longest course in the republic; and it has for its tributaries, from the E. cordillera, the Suaza, Rio Neiva, Cabrera, Prado, Fuzagasuga, Bogotá, Carare, Opon, Sogamoso, Surata, & Cesar; & from the central cordillera, the Plata, the Páez, Saldaña, Cuello, Guali, Samaña or Miel, & Nare, which also is called Rio Negro, with others of little importance. The river Cauca receives the waters of the Piendamó, Ovejas, Palo, Amaime, & Vieja, from the central cordillera, & of many small rivers from the western, among which we will name only the Jamundi. The Cauca, in flowing through Antioquia, receives many streams, of which the Porce, Nechi, & San Jorge, are worthy of notice. In the W. part, the Guacubá & Napipi are tributaries of the Atrato & the Sucio, the Bebara, which is in its upper part, & the Quito. The Baudó has no branches, but the San Juan receives the Calima & the Noanamo, with many others of small size. In the Isthmus of Darien & Panama on the S., the longest streams are the San Miguel & Bayano, in the territory of Darien & Panama. The other streams are of small importance on both sides. We will mention only Chagres, on the Atlantic, which has hitherto been of great importance as the line of inter-oceanic communication. The Zinú is the only river remaining to claim attention on the shores of the Atlantic between the Darien & Magdalena. The rivers which water the territory between the bay of Buenaventura & the gulf of Ancon, in the Pacific, deserve to be mentioned, because there is hardly in the world such a series of streams, which for an extent of forty five leagues, alternately unite their waters in the deltas, so as to make a littoral canal, which allows an interior navigation along the whole coast from Buenaventura to Ancon, without the necessity of entering the Pacific more than twice. The Dagua empties into the bay of Buenaventura, as well as the Anchicaya, which unites by an arm with the Raposo, flowing into the Pacific; & passing in that part the gulf of Tortugas, of small extent, we enter the waters of the Cajambre, whose delta is passed to that of Yurmangui. That river is confounded with the Naya, & that with the Micay, which communicates with the Saija, and that with the Timbiqui, which joins the mouths of the Napi & Guapi; & this last, with that of the Iscuandé, which, by two channels, is connected with that of the Tapage, which, by the Sanquianga, facilitates navigation with the deep Patia. From this we pass to the gulf of Tumaco, to enter the northern mouth of the river Mira, & by its delta pass to the gulf of Ancon de Sardinas, south of Cape Manglares.

From the bay of Calabozo, in Goajira, situated in the Gulf of Maracaibo, until passing the peninsula, we find no regular ports. Bahia Honda is the first on the N.-eastern coast of New Granada: & there the conquerors thought of founding a city by the name of St. Mary: but the want of potable water made them abandon their intention. From that bay to Santa Marta there is no other favored by nature, only several roads, among which are Rio Hacha & Dibulla. In the former of the two places mentioned is the port of the province of that name, the city of Rio Hacha, one of those which have the greatest export trade in New Granada. The port of Dibulla is better than that of Rio Hacha. Following the coast towards the W., Santa Marta is a beautiful port, in a deep & well-sheltered bay. The coast, at that point, changes its direction, running to the E. for a distance of twenty nautical miles, to the shores of Cienaga, where is the mouth of the lake of Santa Marta, the largest in New Granada, as its greatest extent from S. to N. is 25 miles, & from E. to W. 11, & is connected by deep channels with lake Pajaral, which contains about seven square miles, & that of Cuatro Bocas, two square m. This beautiful lake is formed by the waters of the Magdalena mingled with those of the Atlantic, & may be considered as within the delta of the Magdalena, as the channels of San Antonio, Renegado, Remolino, & Clarin, are other arms of that river, which empty into that lake, commonly called Cienega. The waters which fall from the snowy region of Santa Marta, come from the east to the lake: & from the mountains which form the chain of the Upar, a ramification of the snowy region, flow other rivers of small importance. Beyond the centre of the delta of the Magdalena is the bay of Sabanilla. Next follows the magnificent port of Carthagena, the best on the coasts watered by the Caribbean Sea in New Granada, & one of the best in all the Atlantic. All the W. coast of the province of Carthagena, has roads & landing places. The most important are the ports of Zapote, in the bay of Zispata, & the gulf of Morrosquillo, on the coast of Tolu. The gulf of Darien contains the ports of Turbo, Guacuba, & Candelaria, &. for small vessels & steamers, those of Quibdó, Napipi, & Murindó. The coast of the Isthmus, from where the delta of the Atrato terminates, to the port of Portobelo, has good roads & harbors all along the shore, which is inhabited only by the savages of Darien, the most important of which is Mandinga. The harbor of Portobelo is excellent, & was the most frequented of all in the two first centuries after the conquest: but in consequence of the difficulty of the land passage to Panama, it has lost its importance. Chagres ruined it, which is only a bad roadstead. Navy Bay will be the principal port of the Isthmus on the Atlantic, in which the port of Aspinwall will become an important city in the commercial world. In the W. part of the coast of New Granada, there is no other port of any importance but the Bocas del Toro, in the bay of Almirante, commonly called the lake of Chiriqui, on the Pacific coast. Alange & Montijo have been made ports of foreign commerce in the provinces of Chiriqui & Veraguas. They are situated in the Archipelago of Montijo or Veraguas. The bay of Panama, in the gulf of the Isthmus N. of the Archipelago of Pearls, is of great extent, & has also good anchorage, especially at the island of Taboga: but it would be very expensive to construct wharves, necessary on account of the shallowness of the water, which extends to a distance of a mile from the city. On the coast of Chocó are the bay of Cupica & the ports of San Francisco Solano, Palmar, & Charambirá. This bay is succeeded by that of Malaga, which is protected by the island of Palmas, and might easily be brought into connection with Charambirá & Buenaventura. That magnificent bay is the best on the Pacific coast of Columbia, & lies in 3° 38′ N. lat., & 77° 10′ W. lon. I have in another place described the coast & its natural canals, formed by the deltas of the rivers which bathe the shores of the Pacific. There are among them several harbors more or less deep, the principal of which are the Guapí, in 2° 35′ N. lat., & Izcuandé, in 2° 32′, the main entrance to which is by the river Tapaje. Farther S. are the bay of Pasa-caballos, near the mouth of Satinga in lat. 2° 30′ N., & the port of Tumaco, in 1° 38′ N. In the N.-east part of the island of Gorgona is an excellent harbor called Trinidad.

The islands of New Grenada in the Caribbean sea are a cluster eleven in number, in the Saguna of Chiriqui; two small islands in the escudo of Veraguas, forty in the Archipelago of Mulatos, & twenty from Boree to the Gulf of Marasquillo. In the Pacific Ocean is the Archipelago of Pearls (ten in number), in the Gulf of Panama, & in the bay of Panama Taboga three other smaller islands. On the coast of Veragua & Chiriqui is another archipelago (seventeen in number), of which the most important is Coiba. On the coast of Barbacoas is Gorgona & Tumaco; & Las Palmas (three in number), bordering the province of Buenaventura.

In the province of Upar are the lakes of Zapatosa & Adentro, formed by the waters of the river Cesar. The former is about a mile square; & the latter rather more. They are connected by an arm, or by the course of the stream named, & empty into the Magdalena in 9° N. lat., at the bifurcation of that river at the mouth of the Loba, by which it connects itself with the Cauca, that still runs in that latitude parallel with the Magdalena. Between the Cauca & the Nechi are other lakes, the largest of which is that of Caceres in N. lat. 7° 45′, & W. lon. 75° 30′. In the interior are none worthy of notice except that of Tota, in the province of Tunja, which contains about six square miles, & those of Fuquene & Guatavita, in the provinces of Bogotá and Zipaquirá, the former 8 square miles, & the latter less than one, but celebrated as the place into which the Indians threw their treasures at the time of the conquest. On the high table-lands of the Andes there are small lakes which are generally the sources of different rivers; & the most remarkable of them are the Paletara, E.ward of the snowy region of the Coconucos, & those of Las Papas, which give rise to the rivers Cauca & Magdalena, & also to the Mocoa, the principal headstream of the Caquetá, as well as to the Guachicono, which is that of the Patia. These lakes are several, surrounded by high crests, not rising to the region of perpetual snow, & called Paramo de las Papas. On the coast of the Pacific is the lake of Chimbusa, which which is on the Delta of the Patia, & might serve to form a channel which would facilitate navigation from the gulf of Tumaco to the interior of the Patia, to reach the rich neighborhood of Barbacoas. The Cocha is in the cordillera of Pasto, which is considered as the head-stream of the Putumayo: also that of Guayabeno, along which runs the boundary between New Granada & Ecuador, between the Putumayo & the Napo.

Gneiss, granite, porphyry, & basalt, are the primitive rocks of the plutonic formation, which are discovered on our high elevations, & from which the movement of waters has not been able to separate other materials, which geologists call transition. From Tuquerres by Aponte, Las Papas, to Bogota, & at many points in the Central Cordillera, as at Guanacas, Las Moras, & Quindio, are seen rocks of gneiss, micaceous schistus, and specimens of a talcose slate. In the cordilleras of Pasto and Popayan, as in that of Neiva, above Villa Vieja & on the river Cabrera, are found masses of porphyry, trappe, & basalt, on the declivities of the mountains, which are active volcanoes; & those rocks are so disposed as to show that they proceeded from the bottom of the volcano, and were thrown out during an eruption, of which there are no records, & no other indications than the marks left by the catastrophe, in the superposition of various rocks whose bases are basaltic trappes in Puracé, Pasto, Sotará, & Huila. The high table-lands, as those of Tuquerres, Bogota, Tunja, & Pamplona, abound in calcareous & carboniferous soils, sandstone being very common. On those great table-lands is found rock salt; & above all on that of Bogota, in a very extensive region, from Zipaquirá to Cumaral, on the side of the eastern cordillera, which sends its waters to the Meta; & it may be said, that in an E.S.E. direction, going from Zipaquirá, passing by Nemocon, Boitá, Salitre, & Cáqueza, & thence to Cumaral, in San Martin. Those lands must have been submarine, before they were raised to the elevation of 1,360 toises above the level of the sea; & on their side are carboniferous lands, which clearly prove the antiquity of this hemisphere. The valleys of New Granada are covered with alluvions, ancient & modern; & we at the same time meet with tertiary formations at their bases, & in the beds of their rivers, which sometimes are seen to have divided the mountains until they have broken through even the granitic rocks, to bear their waters to the ocean. The climate of New Granada is constant in respective places, in consequence of the intertropical geographical position, geological formation, & the actual state of vegetation. There are no seasons like those of the boreal & austral zones; but those commonly called summer & winter may be denominated the Dry season & the Rainy. The configuration of the land & its geological formations, combined with the influence of the heavenly bodies, and the vegetation of the mountains, valleys, & coasts, determine these seasons in a very distinct manner. In the territories comprehended by the table-lands and valleys which occur between the Eastern & Western Cordilleras, from the southern to the northern boundaries, & in the central part as far as the provinces of Antioquia, Medellín, & Cordova, there are two dry seasons & two rainy ones, the dry commencing at the approximation of the solstices, & the rainy at that of the equinoxes. Each continues about ninety days.

The eastern basins & the low lands of the provinces of the Atlantic only have one dry & one rainy season, each of six months: the rainy commonly at the June solstice, & the dry at that of December. In the Isthmus of Panama are the same dry & rainy seasons: but we may be assured, that the dry season does not begin until twenty days after the December solstice, & ends twenty days before that of July, whence the rainy season is longer than the dry. On all the coast of the Pacific from Cupica to the southern boundary of the republic, as also in the interior of Chocó & Darien, from the south to the north, to Porto Bello, there is no dry season, & it rains all the year: which presents a contrast with the coasts of Peru, where it never rains. The vegetation of New Granada varies with the degrees of heat in the climate, & the geological conformation of the mntns. According to observations made, the limits of trees extend to 11,040 English ft.; that of vegetation to 14,217 ft.; & barren sands from this point to the lowest of perpetual snow 15,557 ft. Magnificent palm-trees are found in New Granada, from the shores of the ocean to the elevation of 8,531 feet above the level of the sea. Cinchonas of different kinds exist in all parts of the country; but that most highly valued for quinine, cinchonine, & quinidine, grows between 8,530 and 9,543 feet above the level of the sea. The Mosses are of various colors, and cover not only the trunks of the trees, but also the rocks, & mingle with the grasses. The country is extremely rich in this class of plants, & to it belongs the beautiful Bambusa, commonly called Guadua. The Encinas are handsome & sightly; & by the side of the Cedrela, make an admirable contrast. The Lichens alternate with phanagamous plants, & grow almost up to the region of perpetual snow. The Caucho, which yields the gum-elastic, is abundant, & of three species. That which grows between 1° & 3° of N. lat. is the best, & may be compared with that of Pará. In the Andes are seen the strawberry, or fragaria vesca of the Alps, willows, bigonias, cypresses, & encinas; while on their acclivities grow the intertropical fruits, as bananas, sugar-cane, & zapote; odoriferous gums & medicinal resins are abundant; & of the balsam commonly called Peruvian, the species Miroxylum & Mutis, the Pubescens, called Tache; & that of Tolú, Miroxylum Toluiferum. Another variety, Popayan, or Popayaniferum, differs from all the others. There are magnificent trees for building-timber & cabinet-work. New Granada has no sandy wastes nor barren cordilleras. It is rich in minerals. Mines of silver, gold, platina, copper, lead, iron, mercury, & antimony, among other metals; of lime, potash, soda (among which are rich mines of rock-salt), magnesia, & alumine, among the unmetallic alkalies; of silex, feldspar, silicated minerals with a base of glucine, (of which are the valuable emerald mines,) among the silicious & silicated; of native sulphur, fossil coal, bitumen, asphaltum, & fossil resin, among the unmetallic combustibles.

Christopher Columbus discovered terra firma in 1498, &, during his fourth voyage, on the 2d Nov., 1502, found Chagres & the bay of Limones, called also Navy Bay. Different governments have been established throughout the Granadan territory, while Spanish colonies, a vice-royalty was at length formed in 1732, of what are now the Republics of New Granada and Ecuador. In 1810, New Granada separated herself from the Spanish monarchy, & maintained a constant war until 1824, when the Spanish army was conquered by the Republican, of which two-thirds consisted of Colombians. Bolivar, the most distinguished leader of the Spanish-American revolution, was the first proposer of the union of Venezuela & New Granada, in 1818; & when the Congress of Angostura met, early in 1819, the fundamental law was enacted which established Colombia, on the 17th of December of that year. Venezuela separated herself in November, 1829, and Ecuador in May, 1830; & the central part of Colombia instituted itself the republic of New Granada on the 21st of November, 1831. In 1832, the Constitution of the State was sanctioned, under the form of a Democratic Repub. Government, by dividing the supreme power into the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial, under a central regimen, but giving to the provinces a municipal corporation, that each section might legislate in its local affairs. The Republic was divided into provinces, these into cantons, & the cantons into paroquial districts. The state recognized no national religion; but has declared that it will pay for the Cath. worship, & protect Granadans in its exercise. The law of Colombia which attributed to itself the law of patronage exercised by Spain, has continued in vigor to the present time. The Republic was first divided into eighteen provinces; & they have since been increased to thirty-five. The Constitution of 1832 was reformed in 1843, without any variation in the form of government. Every man born in the Republic, who can read and write, is a citizen, without distinction of race or class; & also those naturalized & twenty years of age. Naturalization is very easy. A foreigner may apply for it; & in case he is neither a criminal nor a vagabond, it is granted immediately. By a law of 1851, slavery was entirely abolished, by giving liberty to all who remained slaves ou the 1st of January, 1852.

Physical features, &c.—This state has only 18 miles of sea coast, & the shore is generally a sandy beach. Portsmouth is the only good harbor in the state. A short distance from the coast the country becomes beautifully diversified by hill & dale, & adorned by several picturesque sheets of water. The White Mountains are situated a little north of the centre of the state, & have become a place of great resort during the summer months; they are usually ascended from the south-west. After climbing the sides of the mountain for some distance the forest trees begin to diminish in height, until at the elevation of about 4,000 feet you come to a region of dwarfish evergreens, which put forth numerous branches & surround the mountain with a formidable hedge a quarter of a mile in thickness. On emerging from this thicket you are above all woods, & at the foot of what is called the bald part of the mountain, which is very steep & consists of a huge pile of naked rocks. After attaining the summit, the traveller is recompensed for his toil & trouble, if the sky be serene, by a most noble & extensive prospect. The other principal mountain peaks are Moose hillock, 4,636 feet high, the Grand Monadnock, 3,254 feet above the level of the sea, & Kearsarge, 2,461 feet high on the west, & the Moose & Ossipee mountains of the east. These mountains, though not a connected range, are regarded as a continuation of the Alleghanies. The notch or gap in the White Mountains is justly regarded as a curiosity. It is on the west side of the mountains near the source of Saco river. It is a deep & narrow defile, in one part only 22 feet wide. The mountain mass appears as if riven quite to its base by some convulsion of nature perpendicularly on one side, & on the other at an angle of forty-five degrees. The road which has been made through this pass is crossed by the river Saco, which rushes rapidly down the sides of the mountain & gives a picturesque effect to the scenery. The Silver Cascade, a beautiful sheet of water, is precipitated over three precipices from a height of 200 feet into a basin formed by the hand of nature in the rock beneath. In its fall it presents a diversity of pleasing appearances, & in this whole mountain region nature seems to have sported her wildest fancies. The lakes form another peculiar characteristic of this state; Winnipiseogee is 23 m. long & ten broad at its widest part. Its form is very irregular; its shores exhibit almost every gradation of scenery, & its surface is studded with numerous islands. The waters are very pure, being supplied mostly by springs. Squam lake is 6 miles in length, & about 3 in breadth, & is surrounded by bold & rugged scenery. It embosoms many islands. Ossippe, Sunapee, Connecticut, and Newfound lakes are smaller, but picturesque sheets of water. Another object of curiosity in this state is Bellows Falls in the Connecticut river at Walpole. The descent of the water in the space of 100 rods is 44 feet; there are several pitches one above another, at the highest of which a large rock divides the stream into two channels, each about 90 feet wide. When the water is low the eastern channel is dry, being crossed by a bar of solid rock, & the whole stream falls into the western channel, where it is contracted to the breadth of 16 feet & flows with astonishing force & rapidity. A bridge has been constructed over these falls, & a canal half a mile long, with nine locks, around them on the west side. Amoskeag Falls in the Merrimack consists of three successive pitches falling nearly 50 feet. There are also extensive caverns at Chester. The profile mountain of Franconia is a singular eminence. It is a regular peak 1,000 feet in height, presenting a bold front of solid rock, a side view of which exhibits a profile of the human face. Granite is plentiful throughout the state, & also marble & limestone. Iron ore, zinc, tin, lead, & copper exist, some of which have been worked to advantage.

There were in this state in 1850, 2,251,488 acres of land improved, & 1,140,926 of unimproved land in farms. Cash value of farms, $55,245,997, & the value of implements and machinery, $2,314,125. Live stock, horses, 34,233; asses & mules, 19; milch cows, 94,277; working oxen, 59,027; other cattle; 114,606; sheep, 384,756; swine 63,487; value of live stock, $8,871,901.

Agricultural Products, &c.—Wheat, 185,658 bushels; rye, 183,117; Indian corn, 1,573,670; oats, 973,381; barley, 70,256; buckwheat, 65,265; peas & beans, 70,856; potatoes, 4,304,919; value of products of the orchard, $248,563; produce of mkt. gardens, $56,810; pounds of butter made, 6,977,056; of cheese, 3,196,563; maple sugar, 1,294,863; molasses, 9,811 gallons; bees wax & honey, 117,140 pounds; wool, 1,108,476; flax, 7,052; silk cocoons, 4,191; hops, 257,174; tobacco, 50; hay, tons of, 598,854; clover seeds, 829 bushels; other grass seeds, 8,071; flax seed, 189; & were made 344 gallons of wine. Value of home-made manufactures, $393,455; of slaughtered animals, $1,522,873.

The Connecticut river has its source in the highlands, on the north border of the state, & its west branch forms the boundary line between New Hampshire and Canada to within one mile of the 45th degree of north latitude. Its general course is south by west, & dividing New Hampshire & Vermont it passes through the western part of Massachusetts, & the central part of Connecticut, where it enters Long Island Sound. Merrimack river, the Pemigewassit branch, rises near the Notch in the White Mountains, & is joined by the Winnipiseogee, 70 m. below the source of the former. It here takes the name of Merrimack. The Androscoggin, & Saco, rise & have a part of their course in this state.

Manufactures, &c.—There were in the state in 1850, 43 cotton factories, with a capital invested of $10,974,700, empl'ing 2,915 males & 9,235 females, producing sheetings valued at, $8,861,749; 91 woollen factories, with a capital of $2,547,500, employing 873 males & 1,021 females, manufacturing 9,712,840 yds. of cloth, and 165,200 lbs. of yarn, valued at $2,439,967; 1 establishment with a capital of $4,000, employing 30 persons, producing 200 tons of pig iron, &c., valued at $17,200; 26 establishments with a capital of $232,700, employing 374 persons, & making 5,764 tons of castings, &c., valued at $371,710; 2 establishments with a capital of $4,000, employing 6 persons, manufacturing 110 tons of wrought iron valued at $10,400; 178 flouring & grist mills, 80 saw mills, 165 tanneries, with a capital of $441,975, employing 513 persons; 40 printing offices, 2 daily, 36 weekly, 1 semi-monthly, & 2 monthly newspapers. Capital invested in manufactures, $18,242,114; value of manufactured articles, $23,160,503. There were in January, 1854, 15 railroads, with 512 miles of track completed & in operation, & 24 in course of construction. The only canals are those for facilitating the navigation of the Merrimack river.

The principal places in this state are Concord the capital, Manchester, Portsmouth, Dover, Great Falls village, Exeter, Nashua, Hanover, & Gilmanton. There were in the state, Dec. 1853, 35 banks with an aggregate capital of $3,376,000; 16 savings' banks, aggregate cap. $2,132,000. Value of exports 1852, $69,458. Imports, $83,319. Tonnage, 1853, 26,645.

Religion, &c.—There were in the state in 1850, 193 Baptist churches, 24 Christian, 176 Congregational, 11 Episcopal, 2 Free, 15 Friends, 103 Methodist, 13 Presbyterian, 2 Roman Catholic, 32 Union, 13 Unitarian, 38 Universalist, & 4 other sects, the whole having 626 churches; total value of church property, $1,405,786.

Education, &c.—The literary institutions are the Dartmouth college at Hanover, attached to which is the New Hampshire medical school; the Theological seminaries at Concord, Gilmanton, New Hampton, & Lebanon: the whole in 1850 had 273 students. There were 107 academies, 5,321 pupils; 2,381 schools, 75,643 scholars; 129 libraries, aggregate number of volumes, 85,759. Annual school moneys paid by the state $1,450,000. There is an insane asylum at Concord, & a manual labor reform school founded at Long Pond.

The constitution was formed in 1784, & in 1792 was altered to its present form. The governor is elected annually by the people on the second Tuesday in March. He must have resided in the state for seven years next preceding his election, be thirty five years of age & possess property to the amount of £500, one half of which must be freehold within the state. The council consists of five members chosen by the people, who must have resided in the state for seven years, & possess property to the amount of £500, & be thirty years of age. The Legislature consists of the Senate & House of Representatives, & is denominated the General Court of New Hampshire. The senate consists of twelve members chosen annually by the people, who must be, at least, 30 years of age, have resided in the state for seven years preceding the election, & possess property within the state to the amount of £200. The house of representatives consists of 250 members, elected annually by the people. A member must have resided two years in the state next preceding his election, be thirty five years of age, & possess property to the amount of £100 within the district which he represents, one half of which must be freehold. All judicial officers are nominated & appointed by the governor & council, & hold their offices during good behavior, but are removable by the governor with consent of the council at the representation of both houses of the legislature. No judicial officer can hold office after he is 70 years of age. The secretary & treasurer are elected by the joint ballot of both houses of the legislature. Every male citizen of the age of 21 years or over, excepting paupers & persons excused from paying taxes at their own request, has the right of suffrage.

The first settlements made in this state were at Dover & Portsmouth in 1623. In 1641 all its settlements by a voluntary act submitted to Massachusetts, but were made a separate province by an act of Charles II. in 1679. A temporary government was established in 1776 to continue during the war of the revolution. June 21st, 1788, the state in convention adopted the constitution of the United States: Yeas, 57; Nays, 46.

The State Prison is at Concord.

NEW HAMPTON, p-t., Belknap co., N. H., 29 N.W. Concord, 510 W. Pemigewasset r. washes its W. boundary, & across it is a bridge to Bristol. Surface uneven; soil very fertile. Incorporated in 1777. The Concord & Montreal railroad passes through the north part of the t. The v. contains 2 Baptist churches, and the New Hampton theological seminary, under the direction of the Baptists. This institution has a male & a female department. In the male department are 6 professors, & in the female, a principal & 4 teachers. It has about 2,500 vols. in its libraries. There are 4 terms yearly. The Fall term commences on the first Monday in September. There are in the t. 2 fulling m., 2 woollen fac., 4 tanneries, 3 grist m., 5 saw m., an academy, 16 schools. Pop. 1840, 1,809; 1850, 1,612.

NEW HAVEN, a city & seaport, capital of New Haven co., & semi-capital of Connecticut, lies round the head of a bay which sets up 4 miles from Long Island sound, & at the junction of the New York & New Haven, the New Haven, Hartford, & Springfield, New Haven & Northampton, New Haven & New London, & the Airline r. r. It is in 41° 18′ 27″ N. lat., and 72° 55′ 24″ W. lon. from Greenwich. It is 36 miles S. by W. from Hartford, 50 W. from New London, 76 N.E. from New York, 134 W.S.W. from Boston, & 300 from W. The population of the city in 1810 was 5,772; in 1820, 7,147; in 1830, 10,180; in 1840, 12,960; in 1850, 20,345; in 1854, 25,000. The city is on a beautiful plain, with a slight inclination toward the water, and skirted in other directions by an amphitheatre of hills, two of which consist of bold rocky eminences, called East & West Rock, which present fronts nearly perpendicular, from 350 to 370 feet high. The tops of these 2 elevations afford beautiful views, not only of the city & the surrounding country, but of Long Island sound, terminated by the island facing in the distance. Two small rivers, West river on the west, & Quinnipiac on the east, bound this plain. The city extends about 3 miles from E. to W., & 2 from S. to N. It is laid out with great regularity, & consists of 2 parts, the old town & the new township. The old town was laid out in the form of a square, half a mile on a side, divided into 9 smaller squares, each 52 rods on a side, separated by streets 4 rods in width. The squares have generally been divided into 4 parts, by streets intersecting them. The central square was reserved for public purposes, & is divided into 2 parts by Temple street. The eastern half of this square is unoccupied by buildings, but ornamented by lofty trees. On the W. side of the square, & fronting toward the E., is the fine row of buildings belonging to Yale College, of very commanding appearance, with handsome trees in front. The whole square, with its fine public buildings, & its lofty & graceful elms, presents an assemblage of beauty unsurpassed by any public ground of any city in the country. The houses of the city are neatly built, and surrounded by court yards & gardens, ornamented by shrubbery & fruit trees. The whole city has a quiet & rural aspect, scarcely elsewhere to be found in so large a place. The new township is regularly laid out and finely built, and has a fine public ground called Wooster square, containing 5 acres. At the N.E. corner of the old town is the public cemetery, containing over 17 acres, intersected by avenues & alleys at right angles with each other, & contains many monuments, & is beautifully ornamented by shrubbery, & deservedly attracts much public attention. The Evergreen cemetery, at the western extremity of the city, is laid out with much taste.

The city contains about 6 square miles; the whole township contains 8; & a small village called Westville, at the foot of West Rock on the W., & about half of the village of Fairhaven on the E., are within the town, but not within the city limits. The harbor of New Haven is safe but shallow, & gradually filling up with mud. It has about 7 feet of water on the bar at low tide, & the common tides rise to 6 feet, & the spring tides about 7 or 8 feet. Long wharf is 3,943 feet in length, but there is a less depth of water at its termination now, than there was in 1765, when it was only 20 rods long. The maritime commerce of New Haven is more extensive than that of any other city in Connecticut, its foreign & coasting trade being both considerable. The sealing business, connected with the China trade, formerly brought considerable wealth into the city. At present its foreign trade is chiefly with the West Indies. The tonnage of the port in 1852 was 20,118. The city contains 25 churches,—3 Baptist, 10 Congregational, 3 Episcopal, 1 Jews' synagogue, 5 Methodist, 2 Roman Catholic, & 1 Universalist,—a custom house, an almshouse, a jail, a museum, 5 banks, aggregate capital $1,988,623, a savings' institution, various benevolent societies, the Young Men's Institute, & an institution for popular lectures, with one of the best-selected libraries in the Union. The State Hospital, founded in 1832, is about half a mile S.W. from the centre of the city, & has a fine edifice with a colonnade. But the most important public institution in the city is Yale College, one of the oldest & most extensive institutions of the kind in the United States. It was founded in 1701, originally at Killingsworth, removed to Saybrook in 1707, & to New Haven in 1717. There are 4 college halls 100 feet by 40, 4 stories high, containing 32 rooms each for students; & N. of these is another hall devoted to the use of the theological students; there is a chapel, in which is one story appropriated to religious worship, and one to the college library; & two other buildings, called the Athenæum, & the Lyceum, appropriated to recitation & lecture rooms, rooms for the professors, & for the libraries of the literary societies. These are all of brick; & the buildings intermediate between the college halls, have neat cupolas: one of which is after the model of the Temple of the Winds, fitted up for the use of a splendid telescope. In the rear of these is another range of buildings, consisting of the chemical laboratory; the commons hall in the second story, of which is a spacious apartment devoted to the most splendid mineralogical cabinet in the United States, containing more than 16,000 specimens, many of them rare; and a stone building stuccoed, & containing a splendid collection of paintings by Col. Trumbull and others. A short distance from these are the buildings devoted to the law & medical departments, the latter of which has an anatomical museum & a library. Yale College has more students than any other college in the country. In 1854 it had a president & 25 professors, 1,613 alumni, 446 students, & 53,000 vols. in its libraries, among which are many old & rare, as well as many splendid modern works. The commencement is on the last Thursday in July. The medical department was estab. in 1813, has 6 professors & 35 students. Lectures commence in Sept. New Haven has many subordinate seminaries, both male & female, of high reputation.

The manufactures of New Haven are numerous and extensive. Consist of machinery, carriages, India rubber goods, various articles of leather, &c., &c. Cap. empl'd in manufac. 1850, $1,151,400; value of manufac. articles, $3,212,254. There were 10 printing offices, issuing 4 daily, 2 tri-weekly, & 5 weekly newspapers, 1 bi-monthly, 2 quarterly, & 1 publication issued 3 times a year. New Haven was first settled in 1638 by a colony under Theophilus Eaton, the first governor, & John Davenport, the first minister, whom Cotton Mather denominated the "Moses & Aaron" of the settlement. In 1665, this colony was united by a royal charter to Connecticut. In 1784, New Haven was chartered as a city. In July, 1799, the city was invaded & plundered by about 3,000 British troops from New York, under Generals Tryon & Garth, after a feeble opposition on the part of the inhabitants.

NEW LONDON, city, port of entry, & semi-capital of New London co., Ct. It is situated on the Thames, 3 miles from its entrance into Long Island sound, & is in 41° 18′ 57″ N. lat., lon. 72° 05′ 04″ W. from Greenwich, & 4° 57′ 44″ from W. It is 44 S.E. from Hartford, 50 E. from New Haven, 55 S.W. from Providence, & 353 from W. The population in 1810 was 3,238; in 1820, 3,330; in 1830, 4,356; in 1840, 5,519; in 1850, 8,991; 1854, 10,000.

It is built on a declivity, which descends to the E. & S. Back of the city the ground rises to a considerable height, & from its summit presents a fine view of the harbor & the surrounding country. The ground being rough, & overspread with granite rocks, rendered it difficult to lay it out with much regularity; but it has lately been much improved by grading, and many tasty houses erected. The county courts are held alternately at this city & at Norwich. It has the usual co. buildings, & a new & elegant custom-house. There are 10 places of public worship,—3 Baptist, 2 Congregational, 1 Episcopal, 2 Methodist, 1 Roman Catholic, & 1 Universalist,—a public library; 3 banks, aggregate capital, $414,625; a savings' bank, 2 insurance & 1 health insurance office, a grammar school; a seminary for females, 8 public schools; 3 iron foundries, a flouring m., 2 steam saw m., an oakum m.; 3 printing offices, issuing 3 daily & 2 weekly newspapers. It is on the New Haven & New London railroad, connecting with the Norwich & Worcester, & also with the Stonington railroad. Steamboats ply daily to New York. The U. S. Custom-house is a spacious and permanent structure of granite, with flooring upon arches, two stories from basement, & indicating throughout great strength & durability. Fort Trumbull, defending the entrance to the harbor, has been, since 1840, entirely rebuilt, & presents one of the most complete specimens of fortification in the United States, will mount about 80 pieces of heavy ordnance, & will garrison 800 men. The site of Fort Griswold, upon the opposite shore, on Groton heights, the scene of the most bloody massacre of the revolution, when the heroic commander, Colonel Ledyard, was slain with his own sword at the moment of surrender, and which is now commemorated by a granite monument, 130 feet high, erected under the patronage of the state, presents besides, but mounds of ruins, excepting an attached battery, also rebuilt, about midway adown the declivity to the shore. The natural scenery of New London & vicinity, including that of the banks of the Thames, along its course of 14 miles to the head of tide water at Norwich, & also including those of the miniature rivers, a few miles equi-distant, Mystic on the east, and Niantic on the west, is most beautifully picturesque & romantic, embracing in the prospect the various islands which interlock the harbor. No place upon the coast can be more inviting to the sojourner in quest of health and rational pleasure, to which the commodious summer retreats, favorably located, are eminently conducive. An establishment has just been completed near the light-house. Although the harbor for safety & ease of access at all seasons of the year, is perhaps unequalled on the coast, certainly unrivalled from Newport on the east to New York on the west, yet this great natural advantage, for more than half a century, has been overlooked or but partially available, chiefly owing, no doubt, to the very limited inland communication, & almost only coastwise. A spirit of inaction & ease for a long series of years seemed prevalent, while thrift & rapid increase marked the progress of many towns & cities less favorably situated. For the last twenty years, however, the spirit of enterprise has gradually gained an ascendency, with consequent general industry, thrift, and wealth. The whale fishery during this time has been the principal maritime business, engaging the attention of a great portion of the citizens, & with eminent success. For many years New London has been second only to New Bedford in this really great branch of national enterprise. Tonnage of New London, 42,000. Seamen employed in the various fisheries & coastwise, 2,500. There is a light-house on a projecting point of land which divides the harbor from Long Island sound, 3 miles below the city. The harbor is rarely obstructed at all by ice.

New London was first settled in 1646. The township is the smallest in the state, being only four miles in length, with an average breadth of three-fourths of a mile. In September, 1781, a large portion of the place was burned by the British, under the traitor Benedict Arnold, and Fort Griswold, in Groton, was captured, and a large part of the garrison were put to the sword.

Socorro & Dona Ana counties erected since census of 1850.

New Mexico is a mountainous country, with an extensive valley in the middle, running from N. to S., & formed by the Rio del Norte. The valley is generally about 20 miles wide, & bordered on the E. & W. by mountain chains, continuations of the Rocky Mountains, which have received here different names, as Sierra Blanca, de los Organos, Oscura, on the eastern side, & Sierra de los Grullas, de Acha, de los Mimbres, towards the west. The height of the mountains S. of Santa Fé is from six to eight thousand feet, while near Santa Fé, & in the more northern regions, some snow-covered peaks rise from 10,000 to 12,000 feet above the sea. The mountains are principally composed of igneous rocks, as granite, sienite, diorite, basalt, &c. On the higher elevations, excellent pine timber grows; on the lower, cedars, & sometimes oak; in the valley of Rio del Norte, mezquite. The main artery of New Mexico is the Rio del Norte. Its head waters were explored in 1807 by Captain Pike, between the 37° & 38° N. lat.; but its highest sources are supposed to be about 2° further N. in the Rocky Mountains, near the head waters of the Arkansas & the Rio Grande (of the Colorado of the west). Following a generally southern direction, it runs through New Mexico, where its principal affl. is the Rio Chamas from the W., & winds its way then in a south-eastern direction along the borders of Chihuahua, Coahuila, & Tamaulipas, to the Gulf of Mexico, in 25° 56′ N. lat. Its tributaries below El Paso, are the Pecos, from the N.; the Conchos, Salado, Alamo, & San Juan, from the S. The whole course of the river, in a straight line, would be near

1,200 miles; but by the meandering of its lower half, it runs at least 2,000 miles from the region of perpetual snows to the almost tropical climate of the Gulf. The elevation of the river above the sea near Albuquerque is about 4,800 feet; at el Paso del Norte, about 3,800; and at Reynosa (between three & four hundred miles from its mouth), about 170 feet. The fall of its water between Albuquerque & el Paso, is from two to three feet in a mile, & below Reynosa one foot in two miles. The fall of the river is seldom used as a motive power, except for some flour mills, which are oftener worked by mules than water. The principal advantage which is at present derived from the river, is for agriculture, by their well-managed system of irrigation. As to its navigation in New Mexico, even canoes could not be used, except perhaps during May or June, when the river is in its highest state from the melting of the snow in the mountains. The river is entirely too shallow, & interrupted by too many sandbars, to promise anything for navigation. On the southern portion of the river, the recent exploration by Captain Sterling, of the United States steamer Major Brown, has proved that steamboats may ascend from the Gulf as far as Laredo, a distance of 700 miles. Although the steamboat used did not draw over two feet of water, yet the explorers of that region express their opinion, that "by spending some $100,000 in a proper improvement of the river above Mier, boats drawing four feet could readily ply between the mouth of the Rio Grande & Laredo."

There were in this territory in 1850, 166,201 acres of land improved, and 124,370 of unimproved land in farms. Cash value of farms $1,653,952, and the value of implements and machinery $77,960. Live stock,—horses, 5,079; asses and mules, 8,654; milch cows, 10,635; working oxen, 12,257; other cattle, 10,085; sheep, 377,271; swine, 7,314; value of live stock $1,494,629. Agricultural products, &c.—Wheat, 196,516 bush. produced; Ind. corn, 365,411; oats, 5; barley, 5; buckwheat, 100; peas and beans, 15,688; potatoes, 3;—value of products of the orchard, $8,231; produce of the market gardens, $6,679; pounds of butter made, 111; of cheese, 5,848; molasses, 4,236 gallons; bees-wax and honey, 2 pounds; wool, 32,901; hops, 50; tobacco, 8,467; and were made, 2,363 gallons of wine; value of home-made manufactures, $6,033; of slaughtered animals, $82,125.

The soil in the valley of the Rio del Norte is generally sandy, but by irrigation it produces abundant crops. Though agriculture is carried on in a very primitive way, with the hoe alone, or with a rough plough, made often entirely of wood, without a particle of iron, large quantities of Indian corn and wheat, beans, onions, and red peppers, are raised, and some fruits. The most fertile part of the valley begins below Santa Fé, along the river, and is called "rio abajo," or (the country) down the river. It is not uncommon there to raise two crops within one year. The general dryness of the climate and the aridity of the soil in New Mexico, will always confine agriculture to the valleys of the water-courses, such at least as contain running water throughout the year. But this important defect may be remedied by Artesian wells. On the high table land from Santa Fé south, in a certain depth, layers of clay are found, that may form reservoirs for the sunken water-courses from the eastern & western mountain chain, which by the improved method of boring, or Artesian wells, might be easily made to yield their water to the surface. If experiments to that effect should prove successful, the progress of agriculture in New Mexico would be more rapid, & even many dreaded "Jornadas" might be changed from waterless deserts into cultivated plains. But at present, irrigation from a water-course is the only available means of carrying on agriculture. The irrigation is effected by damming the streams & throwing the water into larger and smaller ditches, (acequias), surrounding & intersecting the whole cultivated land. The inhabitants of towns & villages, therefore, locate their lands together, and allot to each one a part of the water at certain periods. These common fields are generally without fences, which are less needed, as the grazing stock is guarded by herdsmen. The finest fields are generally seen on the haciendas, or large estates, belonging to the rich property-holders. These haciendas are apparently a remnant of the old feudal system, where large tracts of land, with the appurtenances of Indian inhabitants as serfs, were granted by the Spanish crown to their vassals. The great number of human beings attached to these haciandas were, under the Mexican government, in fact, nothing more than serfs; they received from their masters only food, lodging, & clothing, or perhaps a mere nominal pay, & were therefore kept in constant debt and dependence to their landlords; so that if old custom and natural indolence did not prevail upon them to stay with their hereditary masters, the enforcement of the Mexican laws against debtors was sufficient to continue their servitude.

Besides agriculture, the inhabitants of New Mexico pay a great deal of attention to the raising of stock, as horses, mules, cattle, sheep, & goats. Their stock is all rather of a small size, because they care very little for the improvement of the breed; but it increases very fast, & as no feeding in stables is needed in the winter, it gives them very little trouble. There are large tracts of land too distant from the waters-courses to be cultivated, or in too mountainous parts, which afford, nevertheless, excellent pasturage for millions of stock during the whole year; but unfortunately the raising of the stock has been crippled by the invasions of the hostile Indians, who consider themselves secret partners in the business, & ann. take their share away.

A third, much neglected branch of industry in New Mexico, are the mines. A great many now deserted mining places in New Mexico, prove that mining was pursued with greater zeal in the old Spanish times than since, which may be accounted for in various ways, as the want of capital, want of knowledge in mining, but especially the unsettled state of the country and the avarice of its arbitrary rulers. The mntnous. parts of New Mex. are very rich in gold, copper, iron, & silver. Gold seems to be found to a large extent in all the mntns. near Santa Fé, S. of it in a distance of about 100 m., as far as Gran Quivira, & north for about 120 miles up to the river Sangre de Cristo. Throughout this whole region, gold dust has been abundantly found by the poorer classes of Mexicans, who occupy themselves with the washing of this metal out of the mountain streams. At present, the old and new Placer, near Santa Fé, have attracted most attention, & not only gold washes, but some gold mines too, are worked there. They are the only gold mines worked now in New Mex. Several rich silver mines were, in Spanish times worked at Avo, at Cerrillos, & in the Nambe Mntns., but none at present. Copper is found in abundance throughout the country, but principally at las Tijeras, Jemas, Abiquiu, Gaudelupita de Mora, &c. There is but one copper mine worked at present south of the Placers. Iron, though also abundantly found, is entirely overlooked. Coal has been discovered in different localities, as in the Raton mountains, near the vill. of Jemez, S.W. of Santa Fé, & in a place south of the Placers. Gypsum, common and selenite, are found; most extensive layers of it exist in the mntns. near Algodones, on the Rio del Norte, and in the neighborhood of the celebrated "Salinas." It is used as common lime for whitewashing, & the crystalline or selenite instead of window-glass.

Santa Fé is the capital of the territory. There were in 1850, 3 printing offices in the territory, issuing a weekly and a tri-monthly, & a monthly publication. In the same year there were 1 acad., with 40 pupils; 146 Roman Catholic churches. Total amount of church property valued at $188,200.

About 100 miles south-south-east of Santa Fé, on the high table land between the Rio del Norte & Pecos, are some extensive salt lakes, or "salinas," from which all the salt (muriate of soda) used in New Mexico is procured. Large caravans go there every year from Santa Fé, in the dry season, & return with as much as they can transport. They exchange generally one bushel of salt for one of Indian corn, or sell it for one and even two dollars a bushel. Not far from these salinas the ruins of an old city are found, of the fabulous "la Gran Quivira." The common report in relation to this place is, that a very large & wealthy city was once here situated, with very rich mines, the produce of which was once or twice a year sent to Spain. At one season, when they were making extraordinary preparations for transporting the precious metals, the Indians attacked them; whereupon the miners buried their treasures, worth 50 millions, & left the city together; but they were all killed except two, who went to Mexico, giving the particulars of the affair, & soliciting aid to return. But the distance being so great, & the Indians so numerous, nobody would advance, & the thing was dropped. One of the two went to New Orleans, then under the dominion of Spain, raised 500 men, & started by way of the Sabine, but was never heard of afterwards. So far the report. Within the last few years several Americans & Frenchmen have visited the place; and, although they have not found the treasure, they certify at least to the existence of an aqueduct, about 10 ms. in length, to the still standing walls of several churches, the sculptures of the Spanish coat of arms, and to many spacious pits, supposed to be silver mines. It was, no doubt, a Spanish mining town, & it is not unlikely that it was destroyed in 1680, in the general successful insurrection of the Indians in New Mexico against the Spaniards. Dr. Samuel G. Morton, in a late pamphlet, suggests the probability that it was originally an old Indian city, into which the Spaniards, as in several other instances, had intruded themselves, and subsequently abandoned it. Further investigation, it is to be hoped, will clear up this point.

The climate of New Mexico is of course very different in the higher, mountainous parts, from the lower valley of the Rio del Norte; but generally taken, it is temperate, constant, & healthy. The summer heat in the valley of the river will sometimes rise to nearly 100° Fahrenheit, but the nights are always cool & pleasant. The winters are long & severe; the higher mountains are always covered with snow, & ice & snow are common in Santa Fé; but Rio del Norte is never frozen with ice thick enough to admit the passage of horses & carriages, as was formerly believed. The sky is generally clear, & the atmosphere dry. Between July & October, rain falls; but the rainy seasons are here not so constant & regular as in the southern states. Disease seems to be very little known, except some inflammations and typhoidal fevers in the winter season.

Of the history of New Mexico we authentically know but little. The Spaniards, it seems, received the first information in regard to it, in 1581, from a party of adventurers, commanded by Capt. Francisco de Levya Bonillo, who, finding the aboriginal inhabitants & the mineral wealth of the country to be similar to those of Mexico, called it New Mexico. In the year 1594, the Count de Monterey, then viceroy of Mexico, sent Juan de Oñate, of Zacatecas, to take formal possession of the country, in the name of Spain, & to establish colonies, missions, & presidios (forts). They found many Indian tribes, which they succeeded in Christianizing in the usual Spanish way, with sword in hand, & made them slaves. The villages of the Christianized Indians were called Pueblos, in opposition to the wild & roving tribes that refused such favors. Many towns, of which only ruins exist now, were established at that time; many mines were worked, and the occupation of the country seemed secure, when, in 1680, a general insurrection of all the Indian tribes broke out, and the Spaniards, who were quite unsuspecting & unprepared, were massacred almost to a man. The Governor of New Mexico, Don Antonio de Otermin, after a hard struggle, retreated from Santa Fé, & marched as far south as Paso del Norte, where he & his followers met with some friendly Indians, made a stand, & laid the foundation of the town of that name. The war with the Indians lasted ten years, when the Spaniards reconquered the whole country. Subsequently, several insurrections have taken place, none, however, have been so disastrous as the first, but the deep rancor of the Indian race against the white, has continued to the present time. There has grown up a hatred between the Indians & the Mexicans, never to be subdued but with the extinction of the race.

Santa Fé was taken by Gen. Kearney, Sept. 8, 1846, & the territory was ceded to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, Feb., 1848, & the present territorial govt. established in 1850. The legislative assembly consists of a council of 13 members, elected for 2 years, & a house of representatives, of 26 members, elected for one year. Governor appointed by the President of the United States for 4 years. Every free white inhabitant, 21 years of age, & a citizen of the United States, is a legal voter.

The Pueblo Indians live in isolated villages, cultivate the soil, and raise some stock, and are generally poor, frugal, & sober. Their different tribes, of which about 20 yet exist, are reduced to about twenty thousand souls. They speak different Indian dialects; sometimes, too, broken Spanish. All of them seem conversant with the old tradition of the sacred fire of Montezuma. The Pecos tribe it seems were the keepers of the sacred Temple, in whose subterranean vaults an eternal fire was kept burning until about 1842, when the last of the tribe left, it is supposed, to retreat to some secure fastness in the mountains, still to perpetuate it. For centuries they have been careful to preserve their sanctuary, believing that Montezuma had kindled this sacred fire, & that he would finally return, if the fire was kept burning by his followers. The religious rites of the Pueblos are a mixture of Catholicism & Indian paganism; the Spanish priests themselves favored this combination, from policy. Their villages are built with great regularity; sometimes they have but one large house, with several stories, each story divided into apartments, in which the whole vill. reside. Instead of doors in front, they use trap-doors on the roofs of their houses, to which they mount up on a ladder, which is drawn up at night for greater security. Their dress consists of moccasins, short breeches, & woollen jacket or blanket; they generally wear their hair long. Bows & arrows & a lance, and sometimes a gun, constitute their weapons. For the regulation of their communities they select a chief, or cacique, & a council, & in war a captain.

The New Mexicans are very similar to the rest of the Spanish race all over Mexico, so often described by travellers. The higher classes conform themselves more to American & European fashions; the men of the lower classes are faithful to their serapes, or colored blankets, & to their wide trousers, ornamented with glittering buttons, & which are split from hip to ancle to display their white cotton drawers. The females of all classes are more than justified in not giving up their coquetish reboso, a small shawl drawn over the head. Both sexes enjoy the cigarrito, or paper cigar, hold their siesta after dinner, & amuse themselves in the evening with monte (a hazard game), or fandangoes. Their dances are very graceful, & generally a combination of quadrille & waltz. The population at the time of the annexation to the United States, consisted of a few Gapuchines (native Spaniards), ½ creoles (native whites of European extraction), ¼ Meztizes (the offspring of whites & Indians), ¼ Pueblo Indians; the males are, generally taken, ill-featured, while the females are often quite handsome. Another striking singularity, is the wide difference in the character of the two sexes. While the men have often been censured for their indolence, mendacity, treachery, & cruelty, the women are active, affectionate, & open-hearted. Though generally not initiated in the art of reading & writing, the females possess, nevertheless, a strong common sense, and a natural sympathy for every suffering being, be it friend or foe; which compensates them, in some degree, for the want of a refined education.

NEW ORLEANS, city, parish of Orleans, La., is the fourth in population, & the third in commerce, in the United States, & is in 29° 57′ 30″ N. lat., & 90° W. lon. from Greenwich, and 13° 58′ 12″ W. lon. from Washington. It is 105 ms. from the mouth of the river Miss., following its course, but not more than 90 in a direct line; 1,040 below the mouth of the Ohio; 1,230 below the mouth of the Missouri; 1,622 S.W. New York; 1,838 S.W. Boston; 1,396 by post-road from Washington. The population in 1810, was 17,242; in 1820, 27,176; in 1830, 46,310; in 1840, 102,193; in 1850, 116,375; 1854, 125,000. It is situated on the left bank of the Mississippi river, which, by a singular bend, causes the city to be on its N.W. side facing the S.E. The city is built on an inclined plane, descending gently from the river towards Lake Pontchartrain in the rear, so that when the Mississippi is full, the streets are three or four feet below the surface of the river. To prevent inundation, an artificial embankment called the levee, has been raised at a great expense, extending from Fort Plaquemine, 43 miles below the city, to Baton Rouge, 140 miles above; it is from 10 to 50 feet wide, & from 1 to 10 feet above high-water mark. Directly in front of the city it affords a very pleasant walk. The position of New Orleans as a vast commercial emporium is unrivalled; the Mississippi, with its tributaries, brings to it the products of the great valley of the Mississippi. The length of the city, built along the Mississippi river, is 7¼ miles, and extends towards Lake Pontchartrain, nearly 4 miles from the river. There is probably no city in the United States which possesses more natural advantages than New Orleans, but it has been proved in more than one instance, that nature alone, unaided, is no match for art, & the inhabitants of that city are fully convinced of that fact by the immense losses they have sustained, by the produce of their soil finding new channels of transportation by the numbers of railroads that have been opened throughout the west, & they have just awakened from their lethargy, & struck out a system of internal improvements, which, when completed, will bring back all that she has lost by her apathy & neglect, with a tenfold increase. The houses are principally built of brick, & many of them in the suburbs are surrounded with gardens & ornamented with orange trees & other tropical fruits & shrubbery. The view of the city from the river is beautiful, & entering it, the stranger finds it difficult to believe that he has arrived in an American city. This remark applies especially to the central & lower parts, where the older buildings are ancient & of foreign construction, where the manners, customs, & languages are so various, the population being nearly equally made up of Americans, French, Creoles, & Spaniards. During the business season, extending from the 1st of Nov. until July, the levee, in its whole extent, is crowded with vessels of all sizes from every quarter of the globe, with hundreds of large & magnificent steamboats, & numerous flat boats, &c. In 1836, the legislature passed an act dividing the city into municipalities, and in 1852 they were again united into one corporation, & the adjoining city of Lafayette annexed.

The princip. public buildings are the city hall, facing Lafayette square, & the Halls of Courts, fronting Jackson square. The Odd Fellows' Hall, & the large & magnificent custom-house, built of hewn granite. The Charity Hospital, completed in 1834, at an expense, including ground, of $149,571, & is considered one of the noblest institutions of the kind; the main building is 200 feet long & 3 stories high, & is entered from Common-street under a Doric portico. The cupola presents a magnificent view of the city & its environs. The lower story is occupied by the library, the physicians' & surgeons' rooms, a lecture room for the medical college, &c., & the second & third stories are divided into wards for the patients, & rooms for the accommodation of the Sisters of Charity, who devote themselves to an attendance of the indigent sick. It is calculated to contain 800 patients. The grounds around it are handsomely improved, & neatly kept. It is a noble charity, rendered peculiarly necessary by the sickness which often prevails at certain seasons in New Orleans, particularly among strangers, who have a free access at all times, & under circumstances of distress by sickness. The churches are 40 in number, many of which are in the finest style of church architecture.—4 Baptist, 1 Christian, 7 Episcopal, 3 German Lutheran, 6 Methodist, 6 Presbyterian, 12 Roman Catholic, & 1 Universalist, & several others worshipping in halls & rooms of public buildings.

The University of Louisiana was founded in 1849, & occupies a portion of the site of the old state-house. The buildings consist of a central edifice & two detached wings. The main building is occupied by the medical department, & is well provided with all the appliances for such an institution; the other buildings are appropriated to the academic, law, & other departments; there are 4 professors in the academic, 4 in the law department, & 8 in the medical department, & the libraries contain 10,000 volumes. The city provides education under a successful system of public schools (in 1850 there were 75 academies & common schools), which have a large & well-conducted library for the free use of the scholars.

There were in 1850, 15 printing-offices issuing 9 daily, 2 tri-weekly, 2 semi-weekly, & 6 weekly newspapers, & 1 monthly publication.

Several of the markets are large & commodious structures. Poydras street market, 402 feet long & 42 feet wide. The vegetable market is 172 feet long, & cost $25,000. The meat market is built of brick, on the levee, & extends from Ann to Main street, is a striking object as the city is approached by water, & cost about $30,000. St. Marys market is in the rusticated Doric style, in the second municipality, built of brick, and plastered to imitate granite, 480 feet long & 42 feet wide, and cost $47,000. Washington market, in the third district, a fine structure. Several cotton presses are among the most imposing structures in the city. The Orleans cotton press is on ground 332 feet long & 308 wide, which is nearly covered with buildings. It contains a centre building, three stories high, surmounted by a cupola, which affords a fine view of the city. The wings are two stories high, & very extensive. It presses on an average 150,000 bales of cotton annually, but its capacity is much greater. There are other cotton presses. Several of the banks have fine buildings, & some of the hotels are magnificent. Two of these hotels cost $600,000 each. The U. S. branch mint has an edifice 282 ft. long & 108 ft. deep, with two wings 29 by 81 ft., the whole 3 stories high, which cost $182,000. The city is supplied with water raised by powerful steam engines from the Mississippi river into a reservoir constructed on an artificial mound 21 feet high at its base. The reservoir is 250 feet square, built of brick, & plastered with hydraulic cement. It is divided into four compartments, to allow the water to settle before it is distributed over the city in cast iron pipes, which are laid to the aggregate length of 18 miles. The water works belong to the Commercial Bank, & cost $722,004. It is well lighted with gas. A draining company, with a capital of $64,000, has two steam engines for draining the marshes of 35 miles in extent between the city & Lake Pontchartrain. There are in the city a U. S. land office, several public and private banks, having a large capital, & several insurance companies, with commensurate capitals.

The manufacturing establishments of this city are comprised under the head of furnaces, foundries, machine shops, sugar refineries, cotton factories, distilleries, tobacco factories, saw mills, &c. The whole employed a capital in 1850 of $2,962,060, & manufactured articles valued at $4,462,944; since which time the increase has been very rapid, & now (1854) are estimated to have doubled the amounts of 1850.

On the right bank of the river, & opposite to New Orleans, connected by a steam ferry, is Algiers, and adjoining, the suburb of Macdonough, where is the U. S. Marine Hospital, & many pleasant residences. Algiers contains several large machine shops, iron foundries, & ship building establishments.

There are steam & sailing packet lines to all the large seaport cities, sailing weekly. Also, steam packets weekly to Vera Cruz & other ports in the Gulf.

New Orleans is often familiarly called the "Crescent City" from its form; for though the streets are straight, those which follow the river have two turns at large angles, giving it something of this form. The river opposite to the city is half a mile wide, & from 100 to 160 feet deep, & it preserves the same width to near its entrance into the Gulf of Mexico. On the bar at its mouth it has a depth of from 13½ to 16 feet of water, with a soft muddy bottom. Large & powerful steam tow boats, some of which will tow six vessels, are constantly employed to facilitate the passage of vessels to & from the Gulf. Two canals lead from basins within the city to Lake Pontchartrain. Through these canals the trade of the country on Lakes Pontchartrain & Borgne, & all the coast of the N. part of the Gulf of Mexico as far as Florida, comes to the city, & a considerable fleet of sloops is often seen in the basin. A railroad, 4¼ miles long, connects the city with Lake Pontchartrain. A harbor is formed in the Lake at the termination of the railroad, & a considerable village is there springing up. The facilities are great, and are rapidly improving.

For commercial purposes, New Orleans occupies a very superior and commanding situation. It is the natural entrepôt for supplies destined to all parts of the Mississippi valley, as well as the depôt for those products of that salubrious region which seek a market seaward. By means of the Mississippi river and its tributaries, an inland trade is opened to her grasp, the magnitude of which has never been equalled. Steamers may leave her wharves & proceed on voyages of several thousand miles without breaking bulk. The Mississippi & its affluents are flanked on either side by extensive territories, unsurpassed, in richness of soil, which readily yield a harvest to the labors of the agriculturist, whether it be of cane, corn, or cotton. These are the principal staples of the valley, & the receipts of each of their products at New Orleans are rapidly increasing. Heretofore, the river has been the only channel depended upon for their transportation. Several lines of railroad are in process of construction now, however, to facilitate the transportation of cotton & sugar, produced at a distance from the river, to market, and thus enlarge the area of production. These bulky products will not bear an extensive land carriage by the old mode, & result in wealth to the producer; but the construction of railroads for their cheap transit to the river even, will not only change the prospects of the interior planters for the better, but will add greatly to the wealth & commerce of New Orleans, which is eminently a place of exchange and distribution. It is the great depôt of the south-western plantations, where cotton & sugar crops are bought & sold while still in the field, or "advanced" upon prospectively if necessary. It has also an extensive trade with Texas, Mexico, & the Gulf ports, as well as a very heavy foreign export trade. She has, besides, a large coasting trade with Atlantic ports, the value of which can only be known generally by its results. Her commercial life may be said to date after the cession of Louisiana to the United States, in 1803, as, previous to that, her commerce was insignificant; and yet, in this short period of about forty years, she already ranks as the fourth city of the world for the magnitude and value of her commerce. The facilities & convenience of transacting business at New Orleans are fully equal to, & in many respects superior to those of any other place. It is the centre of immense exchange operations, and any amount of funds can at all times be obtained at the shortest notice under good letters of credit, & bills negotiated with great readiness and facility on any prominent point in the United States, or any of the commercial cities of Western Europe; & the banking institutions afford all reasonable accommodations to the local wants & trade of the city. Some European cities can show more splendid quays or magnificent docks for the accommodation of shipping, & the landing & loading of cargoes, far exceeding in appearance & durability anything of the kind in New Orleans, but in no way superior in point of actual convenience to the unpretending wharves of the city. As is generally known, the surface of the alluvial soil of Louisiana, including, of course, the site of the city, is considerably below the river in ordinary stages of high-water, & the country is protected from inundation by a raised & solid embankment called the "Levee," extending on both sides of the river below, & a great distance above the city. Outside of the levee the bank of the river is called the "Batture," which in many places is increasing from the continual alluvial deposits, while in other places the river has what is called "a falling bank," & the water gradually encroaches on the land. In the former case the levee is advanced as the batture increases, and this has been the case in a large portion of the front of New Orleans, where in some parts the levee has, in the last 25 years, advanced fully 1,000 feet; & the front warehouses now stand for a long extent that distance from the water, affording a splendid space for the vast bulk of produce that is annually landed & shipped. The wharves are constructed outside the levee on massive piles, driven with a heavy iron ram into the mud, and extending over the the river into the water sufficiently deep to admit the heaviest steamboats & ships to lie up against them; heavy sleepers connect the piles at their tops, & on these piles the platform is laid, of thick planking, the edges of which are separated about one inch, to prevent the accumulation of dirt which falls through these interstices into the river flowing below, & in five minutes after the heaviest storm the whole surface is in perfect condition to receive any description of merchandize. These wharves are thus planked back until they join the crown of the levee, in some places 150 to 200 feet, which is made firm and solid by a constant coating of shells, and always kept in good order. One of these wharves presents an unbroken front on the river of 1,500 feet, and others 600 to 800 feet, & in the business season it is usual to see these fronts entirely occupied with steamboats lying bow on, & each with her stage rigged out to the wharf, actively engaged in loading or unloading. The wharves intended for sea-going vessels are detached from each other with an intervening dock, & each wharf accommodates a tier of vessels, which, unlike the steamboats, are moored up and down the river, one outside the other, three, four, & five tiers deep, with a broad common stage communicating with the levee, and extending on the bulwarks of the vessels to the outside one; the timber, plank, & and all the conveniences for this staging, being furnished by the city, who even also supply tarpaulins to protect the goods in case of rain.

The exports, including the foreign & coasting trade, amounted in 1851, to $54,413,963, which are greater than those of any other American city except New York. Its imports were, same year, $12,958,294. The registered licensed & enrolled tonnage in 1853, was 153,184 tons. Its unhealthiness is against it, though this has been often exaggerated, & the same is true of its morals. It is an orderly & peaceable city, & its inhabitants are distinguished for their politeness, hospitality, and kindness to the distressed. There are in the immediate vicinity of New Orleans 9 public cemeteries. New Orleans was founded by the French in 1717. In 1762 it was conveyed to the Spanish, who, in 1800, re-conveyed it to the French, and in 1803 it was included in the purchase of Louisiana, by the United States. On January 8th, 1815, the British under Gen. Packenham made an attack on the city, approaching it through Lake Borgne, but were signally defeated by the Americans under Gen. Jackson. The British loss in killed and wounded was 3,000 men, & Gen. Packenham was killed; the Americans lost only 7 men killed & 6 wounded. In 1718, Benville, at that time governor of the province, selected the present site of New Orleans, but owing to difficulties he had to encounter it was not located until 1722. In 1727 the Jesuits arrived & were located in a tract of land, on a portion of which St. Charles Hotel now stands. In 1763 they were compelled to quit Louisiana by an order from Pope Clement XIII., and all their property confiscated, then estimated to be worth $150,000, which is now worth over 20 millions. In 1769 the first case of yellow fever known, was introduced by a British slaver with a cargo from Africa. In 1778 Le Moniteur, the first newspaper, was published: there are now 12 daylies & as many weekly papers published. In 1810 the first street was paved in New Orleans: at this time such was the state of the streets after a rain, that sleds were used to drag cotton, which paid $1 per bale. In 1834 gas & water were introduced. The present area of the city is not far from 40 sq. ms., double the size of New York. In 1825 the grounds above Canal street and below Esplanade street were principally plantations.

NEWPORT, cap. of Newport co., & one of the caps. of the state of Rhode Island, is situated on the S.west side of Aquidneck (signifying Isle of Peace), or Rhode Island. The harbor is safe, spacious, & has a depth of water sufficient for the largest ships. Directly in front of the town is a low picturesque island; on this island a small fort was built in 1798 & called Fort Wolcott. On a point projecting northwardly, & about 1 mile distant from the city, is Fort Adams. This fortification, a work of extraordinary magnitude, is defended by three hundred & sixty pieces of ordnance, consisting of cannon, howitzers, & mortars, besides small arms. It will require a garrison of two thousand & four hundred troops to man its works. The town is beautifully situated, being built on a gentle acclivity, which rises gracefully from the water. Its healthful climate, the incomparable luxury of its ocean baths, the loveliness of its scenery, the grandeur of its seaward views, & the romantic interest clustering about its antiquities, have rendered it one of the most prominent & frequented watering places. This ancient town was settled in 1636. It now contains a state house, market house, an almshouse, three academies, the Redwood library, 7 banks, aggregate cap. $680,000; 13 churches,—4 Baptist, 2 Congregational, 2 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 1 Moravian, 1 Jews' Synagogue, 1 Methodist, & 1 Roman Catholic,—5 extensive cotton fac., 2 woollen fac., an iron foundry, 7 grist m., 3 tanneries, 4 printing offices issuing 2 daily, & 3 weekly newspapers, & in 1850, 9,563 inhabitants. Tonnage of the port 1853, 11,947 tons. The Redwood library contains 6,500 volumes, many of them rare old folios; it is beautifully situated, & the style & beautiful proportions are much admired. The retreat for the poor of the town at Coasters' Harbor is a large & handsome building. At the northern extremity of the town, a handsome monument has been erected by the state, to the memory of the lamented PERRY: it is of a single block of granite twenty-two & a-half feet high. The remains of the hero were removed to this place from Trinidad, in 1826, by a resolution of Congress, as their final resting place on earth. Near the top of the elevation of the town, stands on a large field, a relic of antiquity, usually known as The Stone Mill. Its form is circular, & rests on several arches supported by 8 circular columns, about eighteen inches in diameter, & eight feet high; the entire height of the of the superstructure is about thirty feet, its diameter about 15 feet; the top is without a roof, & the interior destitute of fixtures of any description whatever; the distance between the pillars are open, & there are no indications in the stone work that they were ever closed by doors or otherwise. About six ft. from the top are several openings eighteen inches square. The stones of which it is constructed are small, & appear to have been laid in a mortar made of sand & pounded oyster shells. Of its origin there is not even a tradition extant; it is supposed, however, that it was erected soon after the settlement of the state in 1636. A short distance from Newport, in a southerly direction on the sea-shore, is The Spouting Rock; the locality of this curiosity is a break in the general outline of the shore, & at the termination of a beautiful little beach. During the existence of gales of wind from the south-east to the south-west, the sea lashes the shore with the greatest fury, & forces the water upward, in this rocky cavern, to the height of forty feet. Among the other numerous attractions are The Lily Pond, The Town Beach, & the Purgatory, or Lover's Leap. Not the least attractive spot is the elevation known as Tammany Hill: from this eminence, in all directions, may be seen a series of picturesque views. On the east cultivated farms are spread out to the view; on the south a similar beautiful scene, with "Old Ocean" in the distance; at the west the town, the forts Wolcott & Adams, the harbor, enriched with the beautiful islands of Rose & Canonicut, & the distant mainland; and at the north, the picturesque waters of Narraganset Bay, & its variegated shores, studded with villages. The early history of Newport & the isl. is clothed with the deepest interest; its waters during the war of the revolution, bore upon their bosom, alternately, the fleets of England & of France, & it was here that conferences were held between Gen. Washington, Count de Rochembeau, & other distinguished American & French officers, in those days of peril, which ushered into existence this glorious republic. (See Smith's Illustrated Hand Book of the Eastern States. New York & Canada.)

(Cape Howe), & extending W.ward from lon. 153° E. to the boundary of the colony of S. Australia. Area, 430,155 sq. ms. Pop. 1851, 187,243, of which 106,000 were males, & 81,014 were females; classed according to religious belief, as follows:—

Church of England....	83,137	Roman Catholics	56,899
Church of Scotland...	18,156	Jews	979
Wesleyan Methodist..	10,008	Mahometan & Pagan..	852
Other Protestants.....	6,472	Other sects.....	740
Total	127,773	Total	59,470

The Blue Mountains, which traverse the colony from N. to S. at from 30 to 50 m. from the ocean, have an average elevation of from 3,000 to 4,000 feet, & separate the undulating maritime counties Gloucester, Northumberland, Cumberland, Camden, & St. Vincent, from the region watered by the Macquarrie, Lachlan, Murrumbigee, &c. Principal rivers flowing E.ward are the Hunter, Hawkesbury with its affls., the Nepean, Clwyd, Macdonald, the Shoalhaven, Manning, Hastings, & MacLeay, most of which are navigable for moderate sized vessels for some distance inland. Along the coast are several bays & good harbors, chiefly at the mouths of rivers; the principal of these are Ports Jackson, Hunter, Stephens, & Macquarrie, and Bateman, Jervis, & Botany Bay. Lakes are few & unimportant. Climate rather hot & dry, but equable. Mean ann. temp. of Port Jackson, 66°.8; winter, 55°.5; summer, 74°.2 Fahr. The air is pure & free from malaria & noxious vapors, &, on the whole, very salubrious; but the country suffers frequently from drought, & it is more adapted for pasturage than tillage. Six millions acres of land have been appropriated as private property; &, in 1851, 152,057 acres were officially reported as under cultivation. Wheat, maize, barley, oats, hay, & potatoes, are the principal crops; some tobacco is raised, especially in the N., and the climate & soil are well suited for the vine culture, to which, in 1851, 1,067 acres were appropriated, yielding 95,000 gallons of wine. 1,500,000 bushels of wheat were raised, but this amount is insufficient for home supply, & corn is imported from more S. colonies, besides a large quantity of rice from India. Sheep farming is the principal branch of husbandry, &, in 1851, the live stock in colony consisted of 116,397 horses, 1,375,337 horned cattle, 65,510 pigs, & 7,396,895 sheep; the number of sheep slaughtered was over a quarter of a million, the cattle, 42,231, producing 88,145 cwt. of tallow. The quantity of wool produced was 15,268,473 lbs.; & the quantity of woollen cloth manufactured in the colony was 114,394 yds. The estimated value of live stock exported during the year was £23,645. The land, chiefly in the outlying squatting districts, is let by the government in "runs" of several thousand ac. each, at the rate of 2*l*. 10*s*. per annum, for an extent adapted for the support of each 1,000 sheep, or an equivalent number of cattle. The wool produced is of the best quality. Some coal is raised at Newcastle. The whale fisheries are somewhat important; but other fisheries & mines & manufs. are insignificant. Trade is chiefly with Great Britain, New Zealand, the Mauritius, & other British colonies. Up to 31st May, 1851, the imports of this colony were about equal to its exports, having been in

New South Wales proper, consists at present of 37 cos., 19 of which have been settled for many years, & 16 more newly proclaimed in 1848. Principal towns, Sydney, the cap., Parramatta & Windsor (in co. Cumberland), Maitland, Newcastle, Bathurst, & Goulburn; besides Brisbane-town in Cooksland. Government vested in a governor (salary £5,000) appointed by the crown, an executive council of 4 mems., the chief functionaries in the colony; and a legislative council (at present of 54 mems., 12 nominated by the governor, and 36 elected. The statute laws of England are in force. In each co. are courts of requests; and circuit and session courts are held at Goulburn, Paramatta, Bathurst, Maitland, & Sydney, which last town is the seat of the supreme court. The colony is subdivided into the dioceses of Newcastle and Sydney. Public revenue, 1851, £405,598. [Australia, Sydney, Victoria.]

Schuyler county was erected in 1854.

Physical Features.—This state is divided into three unequal parts, by two great valleys, viz.,—1st. The valley of the Hudson including the depression in which Lake Champlain is situated, or more properly the valleys of the Hudson & Champlain united; 2d. The valleys of the Mohawk & Oneida lake & Oswego river united. The eastern division is a long narrow belt, extending from New York island to the head of Lake Champlain. Its eastern limits are the borders of Connecticut, Massachusetts & Vermont, with a slope westward to the Hudson, traversed longitudinally by several narrow valleys. This division comprehends the western slope of the Taghkanic mountains, which form the water-shed that separates the waters flowing into the Hudson from those which flow into Long Island sound. The north division of the state is traversed by the Clinton range. There are several subordinate ranges connected with this group. It begins at Little Falls in the valley of the Mohawk, & pursues a N.east course across the country to Tremblean Point, on the west shore of Lake Champlain. There are numerous lofty peaks which formed a remarkable group, & have been styled the Adirondack mountains. Mount Marcy, the highest of the range, attains to an elevation of 5,467 feet above the sea. This ridge presents the water-shed of the region dividing the waters of the Hudson, or those which flow south into the Atlantic, from those which flow into the gulf of St. Lawrence. The south division is situated between Lake Ontario & the Mohawk, & the Hudson valleys & Pennsylvania. It rises with a gradual ascent until it reaches its maximum height near the southern boundary of the state. The southeastern part of this division is comprised in three ranges, viz., the Highlands broken through by the Hudson, the Shawangunk, & the Catskill. There were in this state in 1850, 12,408,964 acres of land improved, & 6,719,120 of unimproved land in farms. Cash value of farms, $554,546,642, & the value of implements & machinery was $22,084,926. Live-stock,—horses, 447,914; asses & mules, 963; milch cows, 951,324; working oxen, 178,909; other cattle, 767,406; sheep, 3,458,241; swine, 1,018,252; value of live stock, $78,570,499.

Agricultural Products, &c. — Wheat, 13,121,498 bush.; rye, 4,148,182; Ind. corn, 17,858,400; oats, 26,592,714; peas & beans, 741,546; barley, 3,585,059; buckwheat, 3,183,955; potatoes, 15,368,368; sweet potatoes, 5,629; value of products of the orchard, $1,761,950; produce of market gardens, $912,047; pounds of butter made, 79,766,094; of cheese, 49,741,418; maple sugar, 10,357,484; molasses, 56,539 gals.; bees wax & honey, 1,755,830 pounds; wool, 10,071,301 pounds produced; flax, 940,577; silk cocoons, 1,774; hops, 2,536,299; pounds tobacco, 83,189; hay, 3,728,797 tons; hemp, 4 tons; clover seed, 88,222 bushels; other grass seeds, 96,493; flax seed, 57,963; & were made 9,172 gals. of wine; value of home-made manufactures, $1,280,333; of slaughtered animals, $15,578,888.

The principal rivers are the Hudson, 324 miles long, navigable 156 miles to Troy. The Mohawk, 135 miles long, which enters the Hudson a little above Troy; the Genesee, 125 miles long, which enters Lake Ontario, having at Rochester, 5 miles from its mouth, two falls of 20 & 75 feet. Black river, which rises near the sources of the Hudson, & flows 120 miles into Lake Ontario; the Saranac, 65 miles long, entering Lake Champlain at Plattsburg; the Oswegatchie, 100 miles long, flowing into the St. Lawrence; the Oswego, proceeding 40 miles from Oneida Lake into Lake Ontario; the Au Sable, rising in the Adirondack mountains, & having a course of 75 miles to Lake Champlain. The majestic St. Lawrence forms a part of the northern boundary of the state. The head branches of the Susquehanna, the Alleghany, & the Delaware rise in this state. Besides Lake Ontario & Erie on the N. & Champlain on the E., which are but partly within it, there are wholly within the state, many picturesque sheets of water, viz., Lakes George, Oneida, Skaneateles, Owasco, Cayuga, Seneca, Crooked lake, Canandaigua, & Chautauque. The islands belonging to New York are—Long Island, 120 miles long from W. to E., with an average width of about 15 miles, within whose waters on the E. are Fisher's, Shelter, Robin's & some other islands. Staten island, southwest of the harbor of New York, 18 miles long, & 8 wide. Manhattan Island, on which the city of New York stands, 13½ miles long, & about 1½ wide at an average breadth. Grand Island in Niagara river, 12 miles long, & from 2 to 7 wide, & extending to within a short distance of the falls. The harbor of New York is one of the finest in the United States. On the bar at Sandy Hook it has a depth of from 21 to 27 feet. Sag Harbor on the E. & Brooklyn on the W. end of Long Island, have good harbors; Sackett's harbor has a good natural, & Oswego a good artificial harbor on Lake Ontario. Buffalo & Dunkirk are harbors on Lake Erie.

Manufactures.—There were in the state in 1850, 118 cotton factories, with a capital invested of $5,554,320, employing 3,377 males & 5,499 females, producing 59,582 yds. of sheetings &c., & 5,308,561 pounds of yarn, value l at $5,019,328; 263 woollen factories with a capital invested of $3,044,490, employing 3,300 males & 2,645 females, manufacturing 7,124,300 yds. of cloth &c., valued at $5,447,807; 25 carpet factories, employing a capital of $202,150; 20 establishments making pig iron, with a capital invested of $747,500, employing 934 persons, producing 25,062 tons of pig iron &c., valued at $1,007,572; 526 establishments, with a capital of $4,622,482, employing 5,925 persons, & making 104,588 tons of castings &c., valued at $5,921,980; 60 establishments, with a capital of $1,131,300, employing 1,037 persons, manufacturing 15,668 tons of wrought iron, valued at $1,423,968; 1,442 flouring & grist mills, 4,599 saw mills; 942 tanneries; 550 printing offices; 458 newspapers, viz.: 54 daily, 13 tri weekly, 15 semiweekly, 313 weekly, 13 semi-monthly, 25 monthly, & 3 quarterly publications. Capital invested in manufactures, $99,964,405; value of manufactured articles, $237,599,361.

The principal places in the state are New York the metropolis, Albany the capital, Troy, Brooklyn, Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Hudson, Saratoga Springs, Plattsburg, Schenectady, Utica, Syracuse, Auburn, Geneva, Rochester, Buffalo, Lockport, Oswego, and Ithaca. There were, January, 1854, 32 railroads, with 2,345 miles of road finished & in operation, & 564 in course of construction. There is in this state the greatest extent of canal navigation within any state or country on the face of the earth, forming an aggregate of 787 miles. There were Jan., 1854, 312 banks, and 1 branch, with a paid capital of $70,118,000.

Religion, &c.—There were in the state in 1850, 781 Baptist churches, 65 Christian, 215 Congregational, 233 Dutch Reformed, 279 Episcopal, 15 Free, 156 Friends, 1 German Reformed, 9 Jewish, 81 Lutheran, 4 Mennonite, 1,231 Methodist, 3 Moravian, 671 Presbyterian, 176 Roman Catholic, 2 Swedenborgian, 75 Union, 22 Unitarian, 115 Universalist, & 25 other sects, the whole having 4,134 churches; total value of church property $21,134,207.

Education, &c.—Columbia College, New York, Union College at Schenectady, Hamilton College at Clinton, Madison University at Hamilton, Hobart Free college at Geneva, Genesee College at Lima, university of New York at New York, university of Rochester at Rochester, University of Albany at Albany, University of Buffalo at Buffalo, St. John's at Fordham, College of St. Francis Xavier, N. York. The Theological Institute of Episcopal church at New York, Union Theological Seminary at New York, Theological Seminary of Auburn at Auburn, Hamilton Literary & Theological Institute at Hamilton, Rochester Theological Seminary at Rochester, Hartwick Seminary at Hartwick, Theological Seminary Ass. Ref. Church at Newburgh, St. Josephs Theological Seminary at Fordham, Ecclesiastical Seminary at Buffalo, College of Physicians & Surgeons at New York Medical Institute, Geneva College at Lima, Medical Faculty University at New York, Albany Medical College at Albany, Medical Institute of Hobart Free College at Geneva, College of Dental Surgery, New York, and College of Pharmacy, New York. The Law University of Albany at Albany, the state & national Law school at Poughkeepsie. The whole having in 1850, 2,673 students. There were also 886 academies, 49,262 pupils; 11,580 schools, 675,321 scholars; 11,013 libraries, aggregate number of vols. 1,760,820. Capital of Common School Fund, 2,354,330. There is an institution for the instruction of the Deaf & Dumb at New York, an institution for the Blind at New York, a State Lunatic Asylum at Utica, & one also at New York connected with the New York Hospital. & one for paupers of the city of New York on Blackwell's island. An asylum for Idiots near Troy.

There are 3 State prisons, 1 at Sing Sing, 1 at Utica, & 1 at Dannemora, Clinton county. A penitentiary at New York, & houses of refuge for juvenile delinquents at New York & Rochester.

The Governor is elected biennially. He must be 30 years of age, be a native born citizen of the United States, & have resided five years in the state. The Lieutenant Governor is elected in like manner, & must have similar qualifications. He is president of the senate, & in case of disqualification, absence or death of the governor, discharges the duties of that office. The senate consists of 32 members, who are chosen for two years, one half of whom are elected annually. The Assembly consists of 128 members, elected annually.

The Sec'y of State, Comptroller, Treasurer, & Attorney General, are elected biennially, as are the Engineer & Surveyor. The judges hold their offices during a term of eight years, & are elected by the people. Every male white citizen, 21 years of age, who has resided one year in the state, & for four months preceding the election in the county, & 30 days in the district where he offers his vote, enjoys the right of suffrage. Persons of color who have resided three years in the state, & who possess a freehold of $250, & have held it one year previous to the election, & paid a tax upon it, are allowed the right of suffrage.

In 1609 Hendrick Hudson, an English navigator serving the Dutch East India Company, discovered Hudson river, & in 1614 some Dutch merchants built a fort where the city of New York now stands. The state passed into the possession of the English in 1644, who governed it down to the revolution, with the exception of a single year. On the 26th of July, 1788, this state in convention adopted the constitution of the United States: Yeas, 30; nays, 25. The first constitution of the state was formed in 1777; the second in 1821; and the third & present in 1846, & went into operation in 1847.

Commerce, &c.—In respect to which New York stands preëminent above all other states of the Union. The value of exports in 1852 amounted to $87,484,456, of which $74,042,581 in value was of domestic produce, & $13,441,875 in value was of foreign produce. The imports same year amounted to the value of $132,329,306, of which the value of $101,476,839 was brought in American vessels, the value of $30,852,517 in foreign vessels. The total tonnage of the state in 1853, 000,000 tons.

NEW YORK, the metropolis of North America, & the second commercial city on the globe, is situated on Manhattan Island, at the confluence of the Hudson with the E. riv., or Strait of Long Island sound, in lat. 40° 42′ 40″ N., lon. 74° 00′ 41″ W. from Greenwich, & 3° 02′ 45″ E. lon. from the National Observatory, Washington. It is 97 m. N.E. Philadelphia, 216 m. S.W. Boston, 226 N.E. Washington, 773 m. N.E. Charleston, 144 m. S. Albany, 414 m. S. Montreal, 1,622 N.E. New Orleans. Pop. in 1790 was 33,131; in 1800, 60,489; in 1810, 96,373; in 1820, 123,706; in 1830, 202,589; in 1840, 312,710; in 1845, 371,223; in 1849, 400,000; & in 1850, 515,547; in 1854, with the suburbs, 700,000.

The compact part of the city is situated on the S. end of New York, or Manhattan Island, & separated from Long Island by the East river, or strait of the Sound. The chartered limits of the city embrace the entire island, which is of the same extent with the county. The island extends from the Battery, on the S. point of the island, 13¼ miles to Kingsbridge in its N. part, & has an average breadth of about 2 miles. The greatest breadth is on the line of Eighty-eighth street, where it is about 2¼ miles. It is bounded on the N. by Harlem river or strait, the western part of which, from Kingsbridge to the Hudson r., was named by the Dutch Spuyten Duyvel creek; on the E. by the East river or strait, which separates it from Long Island; on the S. by the harbor, & on the W. by the Hudson river, which separates it from New Jersey. It is connected with the mainland on the N. by four bridges, and the magnificent aqueduct of the Croton Water works; with Long Island by 8 ferries, 5 of which proceed to Brooklyn, & 3 to Williamsburg. Five ferries connect the city with New Jersey, 1 to Jersey City, 3 to Hoboken, & 1 to Fort Lee: & on 2 ferries, boats are constantly plying to Staten Island. Thus the insular situation of New York proves no serious disadvantage. The ferries to Brooklyn are by far the most important, as many persons who do business in New York reside in that city. The river is crossed in from four to six minutes, at the charge of one & a half cents. The harbor is spacious & safe, occupying a wide circuit of 25 miles, everywhere bounded with variegated scenery, villages, & country seats, & embosoms several beautiful islands. It is easy of access, & capable of accommodating the united navies of the world. Besides this, it has an outer harbor, extending from the Narrows to Sandy Hook, consisting of Raritan bay. Sandy Hook, on which is a lighthouse, is 18 m. from the city, & at this point there are 27 feet of water on the bar at high tide, & 21 feet at low tide. Within Sandy Hook there is a good anchorage. The harbor is entered not only from the ocean at Sandy Hook, & through the Narrows, but on the N.E. from Long Island sound, & on the S.W. through the Kills & Staten Island sound. The several islands within the inner harbor, attached to the city, are Governors, Bedlows, & Ellis Islands, on all of which are strong fortifications; & Blackwells, Great Barn, & Randalls Islands, in the East river. Governors Island is 3,200 feet distant from the city at the Battery, & contains 70 acres of ground, on which is situated Fort Columbus, in the form of a star, on the centre of the island, & Castle William, on the N.W. point, which is a round tower 600 feet in circumference, & 60 feet high, with three tiers of guns. There is also a battery on the S. side, commanding the entrance through Buttermilk channel. At the Narrows, on the eastern shore of Long Island, are Fort Hamilton, & Fort Lafayette, the latter of which (formerly called Fort Diamond) is built on a reef of rocks 200 yards from the shore. The Narrows here, about one-third of a mile wide, has on Staten Island, on its W. side, Fort Tompkins & Fort Richmond, which are strong fortifications. The entrance from the Sound on the East river is defended by Fort Schuyler on Throgs neck. On Governors Island are houses for the officers, & barracks, which are occupied by a considerable garrison. After passing the bar at Sandy Hook, the channel to the city has a depth of water of 35 to 50 feet. The average tide at the wharves is from 6 to 7 feet. Steamboats are constantly employed in towing vessels to & from the ocean. The excellence of its harbor, & other great natural advantages, have contributed to make it one of the first commercial cities of the world.

The surface of the island was originally uneven and rough, as is now the case in its northern parts, with occasional low valleys & marshy swamps; but the inequalities of the surface in its southern or most densely peopled portion of the island, has almost entirely disappeared, sloping gently from the ridge on which Broadway is built towards the rivers on either side. The streets were originally laid out according to the surface of the ground, & some of them were crooked, but in later times they have been widened & improved. Many creeks & inlets on the margins of the rivers have also disappeared, & the ledge of rocks which occupied the site of the Battery has long since been buried beneath the made ground which constitutes that beautiful promenade. The water line has been materially altered. A large part of Water, Front & South streets on the East river, & of Greenwich, Washington, & West streets on the Hudson river, in the S. part of the city, occupies ground which has been made by filling in the shores. The most elevated ground on the island is 238 feet above tide water. The city extends over 5 miles along each river.

Broadway, the principal business street, and most fashionable promenade in the city, extends from the Battery on the S., entirely through to the N. bounds of the city, & for the first two miles of its course is entirely straight. After passing Ninth street, it follows the course of the old Bloomingdale road to Kingsbridge, a distance of 14 miles. It is 80 feet wide, & for the first 3 m. built with magnificent stores, hotels & public & private buildings; is well paved, & forms one of the most splendid promenades of which any city can boast. The stores, bazaars, &c., abound with luxuries from every clime, either to please the taste, clothe or bedeck the human form, enrich the mind, please the fancy, or garnish the studio, the dwelling, or the cottage. Pearl street, between Broadway & the East river, is in a crescent form, over a mile long, & formerly the principal seat of the wholesale dry goods trade, but now nearly abandoned by that class of merchants, who have now located themselves in the lower part of Broadway and the streets running west to the Hudson river. It is still the site of an extensive hardware and wholesale shoe trade. Water & Front streets, between Pearl street & the East river, is chiefly occupied by wholesale grocers, commission merchants, & others connected with the shipping business. South street, extending along the margin of the East river, contains the warehouses & offices of the principal shipping merchants. In front of it at all times is seen a dense forest of masts. Wall street extends from Broadway to the East river, & is occupied by banks, insurance offices, newspaper & brokers' offices; & at the head of it stands Trinity Church, built on the west side of Broadway. Wall street contains the Custom House and Merchants' Exchange, & many fine buildings, and is the centre of the heaviest money transactions in America. The Bowery is a wide & extensive street, E. of Broadway, running N. & S., connected with the Third avenue, which is macadamized, to Harlem, and forms the principal entrance to the city from the N.E. East Broadway, &, parallel to it, Madison, Henry, and Monroe streets, running a little N. of E. & S. of W., are broad & straight streets, & handsomely built. Bleecker, Bond, & other streets towards the N. part of the city, are beautifully built. Fifth avenue, University place, & the streets which cross them at right angles, is the west end of New York, & contains numerous superb buildings, inhabited by the wealthy & fashionable. Canal street, half a mile N. of the City Hall, and now much below the centre of population, is a wide street, occupied extensively by stores, & is the seat of an extensive retail business.

Public Squares, &c.—The Battery, at the S.E. end of the island, is situated at the junction of the Hudson & East rivers. It is in the form of a crescent, & contains about 11 acres of ground, tastefully laid out, and from it is obtained a fine view of the bay, with its islands and the adjacent shores; it is now in process of being enlarged by filling in & extending its entire outer surface. Castle Garden is built on a mole, and connected with the Battery by a bridge. It was originally erected as a fortification, & having become unnecessary for that purpose, was ceded by the United States to the Corporation of the city in 1823. It has been covered by a roof, converting it into an immense room, which is used for exhibitions, &c. The Bowling Green, at the S. termination of Broadway, is an elliptical area 220 feet long & 140 broad, containing a fountain supplied by the Croton Water Works, and is enclosed by an iron railing. It was established before the Revolution, & formerly contained a leaden statue of George III., which was converted into bullets at that period. The Park, called in early times the Commons, is a triangular area of 10¾ acres, lying between Broadway, Chatham, & Chambers streets. It contains the City Hall, the city buildings, the Hall of Records, the old Rotunda, now used by the Croton Water department, & the new court rooms for the city sessions. It has also towards its S. part a fountain, within a basin 100 feet in diameter, the jets of which can be changed to a variety of forms; one of them confines the water to a single stream, which ascends to the height of 70 feet. St. Johns Park, in Hudson street, containing about four acres of ground, is beautifully laid out with walks, shaded with trees, & embellished with a fountain. Washington Square, a mile & a half N. of the City Hall, between Fourth street & Waverley place, contains about ten acres of ground. Two-thirds of this area was the Potters Field until 1827. It is tastefully laid out with walks & shaded with trees, & embellished with a fountain. Union Square, at the N. termination of Broadway, is in an elliptical form, enclosed with a fine iron fence; has a fountain in the centre, with ornamental jets. Tompkins Square, in the N.E. part of the city, is an extensive ground, tastefully laid out with a fountain in its centre. Stuyvesant Square, on both sides of the Second avenue, is neatly laid out, & has two fountains. Grammercy Park, between the Third & Fourth avenues, is small, but very tastefully laid out, & ornamented with trees. Madison Square is prettily laid out, planted with trees & shrubbery, & embellished with a fountain. Bloomingdale & Hamilton Squares are very extensive grounds.

Public Buildings.—The Merchants' Exchange, one of the most substantial buildings, covers the whole space between Wall, William, Exchange and Hanover streets. It is built in the most permanent manner of Quincy granite, & is 200 feet long by 171 to 144 feet wide, 77 feet high to the top of the cornice, & 124 to the top of the dome. The front, on Wall street, has a recessed portico of 18 massive Grecian Ionic columns, 58 feet high, and 4 feet 4 inches in diameter. Besides numerous other rooms for various purposes, the Exchange in the centre is in a circular form, 80 feet in diameter, with four recesses, making the length and breadth each 100 feet, the whole 80 feet high, surmounted with a dome resting in part on eight Corinthian columns of Italian marble, 41 feet high, & lighted by a skylight 25o feet in diameter. The Custom House is a fine building, constructed in the Doric order of Grecian architecture. It is built in the most substantial manner of white marble, after the model of the Parthenon at Athens, & occupies the site of the old Federal Hall, in the open gallery of which Washington was inaugurated. The building is 200 feet long, 90 feet wide, & 80 feet high. At the S. end, on Wall street, is a portico of eight columns, 5 feet 8 inches in diameter, & 32 feet high, & on the N. end, on Pine street, is a corresponding portico. The great business hall is a circular room, 60 feet in diameter, with recesses & galleries, making it 80 feet in diameter, surmounted by a dome supported by 16 Corinthian columns, 30 feet high. The City Hall is beautifully situated in the Park. It is 216 feet long, & 105 wide. The front is ornamented with columns & pilasters of the Ionic, Corinthian, & Composite orders, rising above each other in regular gradations. It is used for offices, reception rooms, &c., the most conspicuous of which are the Governor's room, & the chambers of the Board of Aldermen & the City Council. The Governor's room is appropriated to the Governor of the state when he visits the city, & has been used as a reception-room for other distinguished persons. It is 52 by 20 feet. The walls are hung with a fine collection of portraits, including the governors of the state, the mayors of the city since the Revolution, some of the Dutch governors, & the principal military and naval heroes. The chamber of the Board or Aldermen is 42 by 30 feet, & the president occupies the same chair in which General Washington sat when he presided over the first American Congress, which assembled in New York. The room contains several fine full-length portraits, painted by Trumbull, of which that of Washington is said to be the best in existence. The court-rooms are very neat & conveniently fitted up for the purposes. To the E. of the City Hall is the Hall of Records; it has a lofty portico of four Ionic pillars on each front, & in the rear of it are the City buildings, Rotunda, &c. The Post-office is in the old Dutch Church, a venerable & quaint edifice of the Dutch school. The New State Arsenal is on Fifth avenue, between Sixty-second & Sixty-fifth streets, 4½ m. N. from the City Hall. It is built in the castellated style, surmounted by 8 towers.

Churches.—Consist of 275 edifices,—32 Baptist, 7 Congregational, 18 Dutch Ref., 50 Episcopal, 4 Friends, 15 Jews' synagogues, 6 Lutheran, 40 Methodist, 1 Moravian, 1 New Jerusalem, 50 Presbyterian, of several denominations, 2 Primitive Christian, 25 Roman Catholic, 4 Second Advent, 2 Unitarian, 4 Universalist, and 15 of various sects,—many of the churches are costly & magnificent structures, richly furnished & adorned, & among them all the various styles of architecture, from the simple Friends meeting-house to the gorgeously decorated cathedral, find a representative.

Literary & Educational Institutions, Libraries, &c.—The oldest is Columbia College, chartered by George II. in 1754 by the name of King's College, and confirmed, with alterations, by the legislature of New York in 1784. It has a president and 10 professors, 1,170 alumni, 124 students, & 17,000 volumes in its libraries. The building is situated on a beautiful square, at the head of Park Place, and contains a chapel, lecture room, halls, museum, and an extensive philosophical & chemical apparatus. The funds amount to about $200,000. The commencement is on the Tuesday preceding the last Wednesday in September. There is a flourishing grammar school attached to the institution. The University of the city of New York, in University Place, is a fine edifice of white marble in the Gothic style of architecture. This institution, founded in 1831, has a chancellor & 12 professors (besides 6 professors in its medical department), & in all its departments 737 students, viz., undergraduates, 145, medical 343, grammar school 249. It has a valuable library & philosophical apparatus. The General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, corner of Ninth avenue & Twenty-first street, founded in 1819, contains two handsome buildings, & has 6 professors, 74 students, and 11,000 vols. in its libraries. The Union Theological Seminary (Presbyterian), organized in 1836, has six professors, 104 students, and 16,000 volumes in its library. The Rutger's Female Institute, in Madison street, has a valuable library and philosophical apparatus. The Mechanics' Society Sch., in Crosby street, has a number of teachers & 500 pupils. The College of Physicians & Surgeons, founded in 1807, has a handsome edifice in Crosby street; it has 6 professors, about 220 students, a library of 2,000 vols., & a superior museum of anatomical preparations. The lectures commence on the first Monday in November, & continue four months.

The Free Academy on Lexington avenue, corner Twenty-third street, is built after the model of town-halls of the Netherlands, at a cost of about $80,000. It owes its existence to the popular vote of the citizens, & is intended to afford additional gratuitous education to the most proficient pupils of the public schools (for to obtain admission to the Free Academy the pupil must have attended the public schools for one year at least). The object designed is to create a corps of competent teachers for the supply of our public schools. It has so far met the expectation of the people, its founders, & is one of the most noble monuments of the Empire City. It has a principal, 14 professors, 8 tutors, & 800 pupils. There are 64 primary schools, & 46 ward & public schools, at which 100,000 children received instruction during the past year. The average attendance through the year is about 50,000.

The New York Society Library, an old institution, founded in 1754, is in the new Bible House, Eighth street, corner of Third avenue, & contains 45,000 vols. Is open on every week day. The Historical Society, at the University, has a valuable library of 12,000 vols., besides a collection of coins, medals, & manuscripts. It has published several volumes of historical collections. The Ethnological Society; the American Geographical & Statistical Society; both of the latter have rooms in the University. The National Academy of Design, instituted in 1826, has purchased the statuary of the Academy of Fine Arts, & exhibits annually a large collection of paintings by living artists. Its exhibitions open on the 15th of April, & close on the 4th of July annually; the same painting is not allowed to be exhibited twice. The Mercantile Library Association was formed in 1820, for the special benefit of merchants' clerks. It occupies the building in Astor Place, & has a library of 25,000 volumes, & a reading-room much frequented. It sustains, in the winter season, an interesting course of literary & scientific lectures. The Apprentices' Library, in Crosby street, contains 12,000 volumes. The American Institute, incorporated in 1829, for the encouragement of agriculture, commerce, & manufactures, has a valuable library, reading room, & a collection of models of machinery. It holds an annual fair. The New York Lyceum, founded in 1838, sustains in the winter season an able course of lectures. The Mechanics' Institute contains a library of about 2,000 vols., a reading-room, supplied with the reviews, literary & scientific journals, & newsp., a museum of models of machinery, & a valuable chemical & philosophical apparatus. It has established an annual course of lectures, & also two schools, one for each of the sexes. The Astor Library, in La Fayette place, founded by the late John J. Astor, has 80,000 vols. New York Law Institute Library has about 2,000 vols. The Printers' Library and Reading Room, 3 Chambers street, open every evening, 3,000 volumes, and all the principal newspapers. The Merchants' and Clerks' Library. The New York Hospital, handsomely situated in Broadway, has extensive buildings. The Eye Infirmary has four surgeons attached to it. The New York Lunatic Asylum, connected with the New York Hospital, located at Bloomingdale, has a large & fine building, attached to which are forty acres of ground tastefully laid out in gardens, pleasure-grounds, & gravelled walks; it occupies one of the most elevated sites on the island. The Deaf & Dumb Asylum is on Fiftieth street, near the Fourth Avenue, & has a principal & 8 instructors. The institution for the Blind on the Eighth avenue, has about 70 pupils. The Colored Home for the aged & indigent; Home & School of Industry; Home for the Friendless; Home, or female department of the Prison Association; House of Protection; Jeay's Asylum for the widows & orphans; Leake & Watts Orphan house; Lying-in Asylum for destitute females; Magdalene Female Benevolent Association; New York Juvenile Asylum; Orphan Asylum; do. colored; Orphans House of the P. E. church; Protestant Half Orphan Asylum; Asylum for respectable aged, indigent females; Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum; Roman Catholic Half Orphan Asylum; Nursery for poor children, &c. There are many religious charitable institutions, which have their centre in New York.

Penal Institutions, &c.—The Hall of Justice occupies the whole space between Centre, Elm, Leonard, and Franklin streets, & is a massy building of the Egyptian order of architecture; it is constructed of granite, & on the E side is entered by a flight of 8 steps, leading through a portico of massy columns; within are the rooms occupied as police courts, &c. The House of Detention is entirely separate from the other portion; it is 142 feet in length, 45 feet wide, & contains 148 cells for prisoners. The City Penitentiary, Alms House, Work-house, & the Pauper Lunatic Asylum are on Blackwell's island, in the East river, about 5 m. from the City Hall.

There are 57 banks in the city of New York, with an aggregate capital of 45¼ millions of dollars, 8 marine insurance companies, & 60 fire insurance companies, with an aggregate cap. of $20,000,000; besides 8 life insurance companies. There are 15 savings' banks, 15 markets, a superb musical hall, 7 theatres, a museum, a circus, & a hippodrome. During the summer there are theatrical performances at Castle Garden.

Manufactures.—The manufactures of New York absorb a large amount of capital. The amount employed in 1850 was $34,232,822, and the value of articles manufactured was $105,218,308. The number of establishments was 3,387, employing 53,703 males, & 29,917 females.

New York, from its admirable position & its magnificent harbor, possesses facilities for trade unsurpassed by any other city of the American continent, & holds only the second commercial position on the face of the earth, & in the amount of shipping surpasses even London, her great commercial rival. The city presents a line of wharfs & piers of an aggregate length of 10 miles, affording accommodations for the speedy & safe delivery of the cargoes from, or freighting to, the fleets of vessels continually arriving and departing. The harbor, which is hardly ever obstructed by ice for years together, bears upon its bosom the richly-laden vessels of every country & from every clime, & her own unequalled fleets depart stowed to their utmost capacity with the products of an immense extent of territory, teeming with richness, & concentrated to this point by the aid of that powerful agent, steam, here first put in successful operation for purposes of transportation. Railroads from the east, the north, the west, and the south, centre here. The magnificent system of canals, together with the navigable waters of the Hudson, connects New York with the St. Lawrence, Lakes Erie, Ontario, Huron, & Michigan, & by the noble works of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, & Illinois, with the Ohio & the Mississippi, an extent of inland navigation unsurpassed.

The following statement exhibits the registered, the enrolled and licensed, and the total tonnage belonging to the district of New York for the 3 years 1849, 1850, 1851:—1849, registered, 378,976 tons; enrolled and licensed, 417,504; total, 796,491. 1850, registered, 441,336; enrolled and licensed, 394,230; total, 835,-867. 1851, registered, 504,309; enrolled and licensed, 436,884; total, 941,193. Tonnage in 1853, 1,321,674. Total American & foreign, 1,813,255 tons.

Within the period of 26 years the tonnage of this port has trebled. Comparison of the tonnage of New York with that of Boston and the United States at different periods:—1851, New York 931,193 tons; Boston, 342,-934 tons; United States, 3,772,449 tons.

The tonnage of several other of the leading ports was, in 1851, as follows:—

	Tons. 95ths.		Tons. 95ths.
N. Orleans	251,900 14	Waldoboro', Me	103,593 51
Philadelphia	222,428 90	Portland	97,571 70
Baltimore	160,511 64	Barnstable, Mass	72,997 44
New Bedford	134,409 46	San Francisco	58,063 54
Bath, Maine	103,795 91	Charleston, S. C.	31,910 27

In 1851, the tonnage of New York was 272 per cent of that belonging to Boston, and 24.7 per cent of the total of the United States. The tonnage of New York in 1851 also exceeded, by about 10,000 tons, the united tonnage of Boston, New Orleans, and Philadelphia, the cities next in order in the importance of their shipping, with that of Bath, the seventh in the list, added to theirs. The commercial navy of New York employed in the several departments of the coast trade & steam navigation:—1851, coast trade, 426,747 tons; steam navigation, 121,541 tons. The steam tonnage of New York compares as follows with that of several other cities—of the several coasts, inland divisions, &c.—and of the United States in 1851:—

New Orleans	tons 156,654	N. frontier	tons 69,165
New York	121,541	Ohio Basin	67,601
Pittsburg, Pa	47,911	Mississippi Valley	67,957
St. Louis	29,568	Atlantic coast	154,270
Detroit	21,944	Gulf of Mexico	23,244
Philadelphia	20,717	Pacific coast	37,986
Buffalo	19,983
Baltimore	14,285	Total	583,607

The steam marine of New York is nearly equal to that of the empire of Great Britain with all its dependencies, which amounts to 1,184 boats, of 142,080 tons. The number of passengers carried by the steamboats to and fro on Long Island Sound during the year was 302,397; on the Hudson river the number of passengers was 995,100; & between New York and Philadelphia the human movement by steamboat reached 540,000.

Amount of tonnage entered the port of New York from foreign ports for the year 1851:—Entered, American, 956,879 tons; foreign, 491,889 tons; total, 1,448,768 tons. Cleared—American, 793,229 tons; foreign, 436,853 tons; total, 1,230,082 tons.

The nationality & description of the vessels arriving at New York in the year ending December 31, 1851, were as follows:—American, 2,381; Brit., 966; French, 30; Bremen, 133; Swedish, 48; Austrian, 9; Norwegian, 54; Sicilian, 7; Hamburg, 44; Danish, 24; Russian, 12; Dutch, 28; Belgian, 18; Prussian, 29; New Grenada, 2; Neapolitan, 4; Portuguese, 14; Italian, 27; Spanish, 12; Brazilian, 7; Oldenburg, 9; Sardinian, 8; Venezuelian, 5; Oriental, 2; Lubec, 3; Mechlenburg, 4; Hanoverian, 4; Rostock, 1; Genoese, 1; Peruvian, 1; & Guatemalian, 1; total, 3,888;—of which, 941 were ships, 883 barques, 1,303 brigs, 588 schooners, 166 steamships, & 7 sloops.

The number of vessels of all kinds built in the district of New York, with their measurement, for the year ending 1851, was:—ships, 23; brigs, 1; schooners, 56; sloops & canal boats, 81; steamboats, 47; total, 208; aggregate tonnage, 71,214. Which compared with the ship-building of the whole United States, as follows, in 1851:—New York, 208 vessels, 71,214 tons; United States, 1,357 vessels, 298,203 tons.

Comparison of ship-building of New York in 1851 with that of the other leading ship-building districts and states:—

States.	No.	Tons.	Cities and towns.	No.	Tons.
Maine	254	77,398 49	New York	208	71,214 41
Massachusetts	133	41,323 93	Boston	50	28,140 74

			Baltimore	72	15,094 18
			Portland, Me	27	12,309 38

Of the total imports of the colonies in 1769, New York city had 62.85 per cent. Of the total exports of the United States in 1792, New York city had 9.71 per cent, & 25.83 per cent of all the customs was collected at this port. In 1800, she had 14.85 per cent of the exports, and furnished 39.77 per cent of the customs; in 1810, 28.12 per cent of the exports, & 60.56 per cent. of the customs; & in 1821, 34.92 per cent of the imports, 16.90 per cent of the exports, & 36.57 per cent of the customs. In the American vessels clearing from New York in 1851, there were 25,285 men, & allowing for those who sailed from the port more than once the same year, the actual number of the crews of these vessels was not far, probably, from 15,000. About the same number entered & cleared again in the foreign vessels. Taking the whole trade of the city, by water transportation, there cannot be employed therein less than 50,000 salt and "fresh-water sailors."

There are in New York many hotels, of which the Astor House, St. Nicholas, Metropolitan, Prescott House, Clarendon, Collamore House, &c., are the most magnificent.

The Croton Aqueduct commences at the Croton river, 5 miles from the Hudson, in Westchester county. The dam is 250 feet long, 70 feet wide at the bottom, and 7 at the top, & 40 feet high, built of stone & cement. It creates a pond 5 miles long, covering a surface of 400 acres, and containing 500,000,000 gallons of water. From the dam, the aqueduct proceeds; sometimes tunnelling through solid rocks, crossing valleys by embankments, & brooks by culverts, until it reaches Harlem river, a distance of 33 miles. It is built of stone, brick, and cement, arched over and under, 6 feet 3 inches wide at bottom, 7 feet 8 inches at top of the side walls, & 8 feet 5 inches high; has a descent of 13¼ inches per mile, & will discharge 60,000,000 of gallons every 24 hours. It crosses the Harlem river on a magnificent bridge of stone 1,450 feet long, with 14 piers; 8 of them bearing arches of 80 feet span, & 7 others of 50 feet span, 114 feet above tide-water at the top. The receiving reservoir at Eighty-sixth street, 38 miles from the Croton dam, covers 35 acres, & holds 150,000,000 of gallons. The distributing reservoir, on Murray's Hill, at Fortieth street, covers 4 acres, and is constructed of stone & cement, 45 feet high above the street, & holds 20,000,000 of gallons. Thence the water is distributed over the city in iron pipes, laid so deep under ground as to be secure from frost. The whole cost of the work has been about $13,000,000. The water is of the purest kind of river water. There are laid below the distributing reservoir in Fortieth street, more than 200 miles of pipe, from 6 to 36 inches in diameter.

There are not more than four cities in Europe larger than New York, viz., London, Paris, Constantinople, & St. Petersburg.

Manhattan was first discovered and explored by Hendrick Hudson in 1609. Hudson ascended the river which now bears his name as far as the present site of Albany. The ship in which he made the voyage from Holland was of about 80 tons burden, & called the Half Moon. In 1610, a ship was sent by the Amsterdam merchants to trade with Indians for furs, &c. In 1613, a small fort was erected, and four houses were built, under the superintendence of Hendrick Corstiaensen, who explored the bay & the several inlets, creeks, &c. But no permanent settlement seems to have been made until about 1625, on the S. point of the island. After the formation of the Dutch West India Company, they took immediate measures for establishing a permanent colony. Under their fostering care, bonweries, or farms, were soon taken up, a substantial fort erected, & the dwellings of the colonists clustered around it. In 1652, it was incorporated under the name of New Amsterdam, and was governed by two burgomasters, 5 schepens, & a schout or sheriff, and continued in their possession until 1664, when it was taken by the English, & the name changed to New York. In 1673, it was retaken by the Dutch, and called New Orange, but they held possession only one year, when it was again occupied by the English, and continued in their possession until the period of the Revolution. The assessors' valuation of property in the city, in 1688, was about $320,000. In 1689, a congress of the commissioners of the several colonies was held at New York. In 1694, there were sixty ships, twenty-five sloops, & forty boats, belonging to the city. In 1696, Trinity church was built. This building was burned in 1776. In 1725, the first newspaper was published in the state. It was called the

New York Gazette. In 1732, the first stage commenced running, between New York and Boston once a month, occupying fourteen days in the journey. The same distance is now traversed, by steamboat and railroad cars, in nine hours.

In 1749, the New York Society Library was founded. During the two succeeding years the yellow fever prevailed in the city to an alarming extent. In August, 1776, the city fell again into the hands of the British. It had, at this time, a population of 30,000. In Sept. of this year, occurred a disastrous fire, which consumed one-eighth of the houses of the city. During their stay in the city, the British troops destroyed all the churches except the Episcopal, or used them for hospitals, prisoners' barracks, or riding schools. They evacuated the city, & Washington entered it, in Nov., 1783. A large number of the Tory inhabitants left with the British army, and their estates were confiscated. In 1788, the adoption of the new constitution of the United States was celebrated by a grand procession, and in 1789, Washington was inaugurated, as the first President, in the open gallery of the old City Hall, facing Broad street. In December, 1790, the population of the city was about 30,000. Free schools were established in the city, in 1797, though not incorporated till 1805. In 1801, the total valuation of real estate in the city was a little short of $22,000,000. The population of the city in 1800 was 60,000, having doubled in ten years. In 1807, the first successful attempt at steamboat navigation was made on the Hudson, by Fulton & Livingston. In 1810, the population of the city was 96,000, being an increase of 36,000 in ten years. In 1826, the completion of the Erie canal called forth an extraordinary triumphal procession. In December, 1835, occurred the great fire, which destroyed property to the amount of nearly $18,000,000. Severe as was this loss, the failures in consequence were comparatively few. The same year (1835), the citizens voted to construct an aqueduct, from the Croton river to the city. This magnificent enterprise was so far completed in 1842, that water was introduced into the city, on the 14th of October of that year, amid the rejoicings of the inhabs. In July, 1845, another disastrous fire occurred, which destroyed property to the amount of about six millions of dollars. The only important battle on New York island was that of Harlem Heights, on the 16th September, 1776.

NEW ZEALAND, a colonial possession of Great Britain, consisting of a chain of 3 islands, with smaller isles in the Pacific Ocean, between lat. 34° 12′ & 47° 20′ S., & lon. 166° & 178° 39′ E., about 1,200 m. S.E. Australia. Pop. 1849, 31,967. Estimated pop. of aborigines 110,000 (?). The two principal islands extend from N.E. to S.W. in an irregular elongated shape. Length of both 1,163 m., mean breadth 140 m. Area, 95,000 sq. m., nearly the extent of Great Britain. New Ulster, or North Isl. (pop. 20,197), is separated from New Munster, or Middle Island (pop. 11,710), by Cook Strait; & New Leinster, or Stewart Island, a small island 61 miles in length, & about the same in breadth, is separated from the S. extremity of New Muster by Foveaux Strait. The islands are of trap & volcanic formation, with shales & sandstone. Principal minerals, copper, manganese, & coal. Surface mountainous, a chain of high-peaked snow-clad mountains intersects Middle Island, from N.E. to S.W. There are several extinct, & some active volcanoes. Mount Egmont, an extinct cone, in W.S.W. peninsula of North Island, has an elevation of 8,840 feet. Tongarero, in centre of North Island, is an active volcano, elevation 6,200 feet. Soil on the table lands & valleys, & near the coasts, fertile, & surface well-wooded. Mountains generally bare of woods, but overgrown with ferns & grasses. Temp. ranges from 39° to 74°; mean of year 58°.2 Fahr. Mean ann. rain 36 to 40 inches. Snow rarely falls, heavy rains & high gales are frequent, but there is no rainy season. Prevailing winds S.E. & S.W.; N.E. winds bring rain. There are several inland lakes, & springs & rivers are abundant. Harbors are good & numerous. A flax plant (phormium tenax), an edible fern (pteris esculenta), the sweet potato, the kauri pine, & various timber trees, are the chf. native vegetable products. Wheat, & other grains, & vegetables introduced by the colonists, are very productive, & grazing grounds afford pasture during all the year. The island affords no indigenous quadrupeds. Birds are numerous, & the bones of a gigantic bird (Dinornis) found in the alluvial soil, afford evidence that such an animal existed at no distant period. The natives are a tall, well-made, active, & intelligent race of the Malay family. When the island was visited by Captain Cook in 1769, they were ferocious cannibals, & cannibalism still lingers among them, although in other respects they are docile, inclined to adopt civilized habits, & are found very susceptible of religious instruction. New Zealand had for many years, been the resort of whaling vessels, & was at first colonized in a desultory manner, until in 1840, when it was adopted as a British colony; & emigration, to a considerable extent, has since taken place under a regularly-organized association. In 1844, an insurrection of the natives occurred, under their chief Heki, but since that period they have remained tranquil. The principal British settlements are Auckland, the cap. of New Ulster, the N. province, & New Plymouth, & Wanganui; Wellington (Port Nicholson), the cap. of S. prov. or New Ulster, Nelson (Tasman's Bay), & Otago. In 1840, 100 American whaling vessels visited the island. Principal articles of traffic, flour, wheat, potatoes, timber, & native flax. Govt. vested in a governor-in-chief (salary £2,500), a lieutenant-governor of the N. prov. (salary £400), and a lieutenant-governor of the S. prov. (salary £800), a colonial council, and six members. The colony is a bishop's see, & there were in 1844, 35 missionary establishments on the islands. A severe shock of an earthquake occurred at Wellington in 1848.

NEW ZION, p. o., Sumter co., S. C.

NEXÖE, a seaport town of Denwark, stift Zeeland, on the E. coast of the island Bornholm. Pop. 1,400.

NEXON, a market town of France, dep. Haute Vienne, 10 m. S. Limoges. Pop. of comm. 2,160.

NEYVA, or NEIVA, a town of New Granada, S. A., dep. Cundinamarca, cap. prov., on the Magdalena, at the influx of the Neyva river, 132 m. S.W. Bogota. Its chief trade is in cacao, the Indians also resort to it for knives, mirrors, & trinkets. It suffered severely from an earthquake in 1827.—II. a town of Hayti, cap. arrond., 70 miles E. Port-au-Prince, in a plain watered by the river Nevya, which enters Nevya bay on the S. coast, after a course of 75 m. A small river of Portugal has this name.

NGAN-HOEI, or GAN-HWAY, an inland prov., China, betw. lat. 29° & 34° N., & lon. 113° & 119° E., enclosed by Kiang-su, Che-kiang, Kiang-si, Houpe, & Hou-nan. Pop. 1812, 34,168,059. Surface mostly plain, & traversed by the rivs. Yang-tze-kiang, & the Hoai-ho, with its affls. Products comprise the precious metals, copper, salt, green tea from the S. districts, to from 6 to 7 million taels annually, ink 2 million taels, the best varnish, & much raw & wrought produce. Chief city Ngan-khing, 160 m. S.S.W. Nan-king.

NHA-TRANG, or YATRANG, a seaport town of Anam, cap. prov., with a good harbor at a river's mouth, in lat. 12° 19′ N., lon. 109° 20′ E.

NHO, or NOUH, a town of British India, presid., dist. & W.N.W. Agra. It has a manuf. of salt from springs in its vicinity.

NIAGARA, r. & falls, N. Y. & Can. The r., which connects Lake Erie with Lake Ontario, is about 36 ms. long, & flows from S. to N. At its egress from Lake Erie, it is three quarters of a mile wide, & from 40 to 60 feet deep, & flows with a current of about 4 ms. an hour. As it proceeds, the r. widens to 6 or 8 ms., embracing several islands, the principal of which are Grand island, 12 ms. long, and from 2 to 7 ms. wide, well wooded, & reaching to within 1¼ m. of the falls; & Navy island, much smaller, celebrated in the events of the late Canadian rebellion. The Falls of Niagara are about 22 ms. below Lake Erie, & 14 above Lake Ontario, & are one of the greatest natural curiosities in the world. When the traveller first arrives at the spot, he stands and gazes, and is lost in admiration. The mighty volume of water which forms the outlet of the great Lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, and Erie, is here precipitated over a precipice 160 feet high, with a roar like that of thunder, which may be heard, in favorable circumstances, to the distance of 15 miles, though, at times, the falls may be nearly approached without perceiving much to indicate a tremendous cataract in the vicinity. In consequence of a bend in the river, the principal weight of water is thrown on the Canadian side, down what is called the horse-shoe fall, which name has become inappropriate, as the edge of the precipice has ceased to be a curve, and forms a moderately acute angle. Near the middle of the fall, Goat island, containing 75 acres, extends to the brow of the precipice, dividing the river into 2 parts; and a small projecting mass of rock at a little distance from it, toward the American shore, again divides the cataract on that side. Goat island, at the lower end, presents a perpendicular mass of rocks, extending from the bottom to the top of the precipice. A bridge has been constructed from the American shore to Bath island, & another connects the latter with Goat island, and a tower is erected on the brow of the Horse-shoe fall, approached from Goat island by a short bridge, on which the spectator seems to stand over the edge of the mighty cataract, and which affords a fine view of this part of it. The distance at the fall from the American shore to Goat island, is 65 rods; across the front of Goat island, is 78 rods; around the Horse-shoe fall, on the Canadian side, 144 rods; directly across the Horse-shoe, 74 rods. The height of the fall near the American shore is 163 feet; near Goat island on the same side, 158 feet; near Goat island on the Canada side, 154 feet. Table rock, a shelving projection on the Canadian side, at the edge of the precipice, is 150 feet high. This place is generally thought to present the finest view of the falls; though if the spectator will visit the tower on the opposite side on Goat island, at sunrise, when the whole cavity is enlightened by the sun, & the gorgeous bow trembles in the rising spray, he cannot elsewhere, the world over, enjoy such an incomparable scene. A covered stairway on the American side descends from the top to the bottom of the precipice. It has been computed that 100 million tons of water are discharged over the precipice every hour. The rapids commence about a mile above the falls, & the water descends 57 feet before it arrives at the cataract. The view from the bridge to Goat island, of the troubled water dashing tumultuously over the rocks, is terrific. While curiosity constitutes an attribute of the human character, these falls will be frequented by admiring & delighted visitors, as one of the grandest exhibitions in nature. A wire suspension bridge spans the river 1¼ m. below the falls. It is 800 feet long, 40 wide, & 200 feet above the surface of the water.

NIAGARA, county, N. Y. Situated on the N.W. border of the state. Area, 484 sq. ms. Lake Ontario bounds it on the N., & Niagara river on the W. The surface rises gradually from the lake shore to the mntn. ridge, from 7 to 12 ms. distant, & between this ridge & the lake is the Ridge road, 3 or 4 ms. N. of the mntn. ridge, consisting of an arched surface, composed of sand & gravel, elevated 130 feet above the surface of the lake. Drained by Tonawanda cr. The southern portion of the county is diversified; soil generally fertile. Capital, Lockport. There were in 1850, live stock valued at $1,088,304; wheat, 917,739 bush. produced; Indian corn, 345,257; oats, 321,283; wool, 168,330 pounds:—13 flouring and grist m., 6 iron foundries, 2 woollen fac., 1 cotton fac.; 7 tanneries, 28 persons employed; 4 printing offices, 1 daily & 4 weekly newspapers published. Capital employed in manufac. $1,196,340; value of manufactured articles, $2,257,167:—60 churches; 2 academies, 128 pupils; 116 schools, 11,061 scholars; 147 libraries, 20,679 vols. Pop. 1840, 31,132; 1850, 42,276.

NIAGARA, t., Niagara co., N. Y., 16 W. Lockport, 298 W. Albany. Surface undulating; soil calcareous gravelly loam, underlaid with limestone and gypsum. It is situated on the mountain ridge, & is bounded W. by Niagara r. It contains the eastern part of the great cataract of Niagara. Goat island, & some smaller isls. are within the limits of the t. It has a fulling m., a woollen fac., a cotton fac., a paper fac., a furnace, a grist m., 4 saw m., 2 sch. Pop. 1840, 1,277; 1850, 1,951.

NIAGARA, p.t., and capital Lincoln co., Can. W. Situated on the left bank of the Niagara r., at its entrance into Lake Ontario, 30 m. E. Hamilton. It contains a court-house, 5 churches,—1 Episcopal, 1 Free, 1 Methodist, 1 Presbyterian, & 1 Roman Catholic,—4 stores, 2 printing offices, each issuing a weekly newspaper, & 3,310 inhabitants. Pop. of t. 1842, 2,250.

NIAGARA FALLS, p-v., Niagara t. & co., N. Y., 297 W. by N. Albany, 403 W. Situated on the right bank of Niagara r. at the falls, & contains 5 churches,—1 Baptist, 1 Episcopal, 1 Methodist, 1 Presbyterian, & 1 Roman Catholic,—2 seminaries, 1 for males & 1 for females, several extensive hotels, 9 stores, a grist m., 2 saw m., a paper m., a woollen fac., a furnace, 2 machine shops, & 1,000 inhabitants. It has railroad communication with Buffalo, with Rochester, Lockport, & Lewiston.

NIANGUA, r., Mo., a tributary of Osage r.

NIANTIC, sta., New London co., Ct., on the Niantic r., & on the New Haven & New London r. r., 47 ms. from New Haven.

NIAS, or PULO-NIAS, an island of the Asiatic Archipelago, & one of the largest skirting the W. coast of Sumatra. Length 70 m., average breadth 16 m. Soil fertile, & it produces large quantities of rice. On its E. coast is a vill. or town of same name.

NIAZEPETROVSK, a market town of Russia, gov. Perm, on the Ufa, 80 m. E.S.E. Krasno-Ufimsk, with extensive iron-works.

NIBE, a town of Denmark, prov. Jutland, stift amt., & 12 m. W.S.W. Aalborg, on the Limfiord. Pop. 1,200.

NIBLEY (NORTH), a pa. of Engl., co. & 16 m. S. S.W. Gloucester. Area, 3,345 ac. Pop. 1,133, partly employed in woollen manufs.

NICE (vulg. Nice), a city, Asia Minor. [ISNIK.]

NICANDRO (ST.), two towns of Naples.—I. prov. Capitanata, cap. cant., in the peninsula of Gargano, 10 m. E. Lesina. Pop. 7,800.—II. prov. & 10 m. S.W. Bari. Pop. 2,900.

NICARAGUA, a Republic of Central America. It extends from lat. 10° 45′ to 13° 20′ N., at the Bay of Conchagua, on the Pacific ocean, lon. 83° 40′ to 87° 40′ W.; having W. the Pacific Ocean, E. the Caribbean Sea, and part of the so-called Mosquito territory, N. the state of Honduras & San Salvador, & S. Costa Rica. Area about 49,000 sq. m. The Republic is divided into five Departments, each of which has several Judicial Districts, as follows:—

Departments.	Pop.	Districts.
Meridional	20,000	Rivas or Nicaragua.
Oriental	95,000	Acayopa or Choutales, Grenada, Masaga, & Managua.
Occidental	90,000	Leon and Chinandega.
Septentrional of Matagalpa	40,000	Matagalpa.
Septentrional of Segovia	12,000	Segovia.
Total	247,000

The population here given is the results arrived at, in round numbers, by a census attempted in 1846. It was only partially successful, as the people supposed it preliminary to some military conscription, or new tax. The principal towns of the State, with their estimated population, are as follows:—

Leon (the capital), including Subtiava	25,000	Puebla Nueva	2,900
Chinandega	11,000	Nagorote	1,800
Chinandego Viejo	3,000	Souce	2,500
Realejo	1,000	Managua	12,000
Chichigalpa	2,800	Massaya	15,000
Posultega	900	Grenada	10,000
Telica	1,000	Nicaragua	8,000
Somotillo	2,000	Segovia	8,000
Villa Nueva	1,000	Matagalpa	2,000

It is a singular fact that the females greatly exceed the males in number. In the Department Occidental, according to the census, the proportions were as three to two! The civilized Indians, & those of Spanish & negro stocks crossed with them, constitute the mass of the population. The pure individuals of pure European stock constitute but a small part of the whole, & are more than equalled in number by those of pure negro blood. The entire population may be divided as follows:—Whites, 20,000; negroes, 15,000; Indians, 80,000; mixed, 130,000.—Total, 250,000. Most of these live in towns, many of them going two, four, and six miles daily to labor in the fields, starting before day & returning at night. The plantations, "haciendas," "hattos," "ranchos," & "chacras" are scattered pretty equally over the country, and are reached by paths so obscure as almost wholly to escape the notice of travellers who, passing through what appears to be a continual forest from one town to another, are liable to fall into the error of supposing the country almost wholly uninhabited. Their dwellings are usually of canes, thatched with palm, many of them open at the sides, & with no other floor but the bare earth, the occupation of which is stoutly contested by pigs, calves, fowls, & children. These fragile structures, so equable and mild is the climate, are adequate to such protection as the natives are accustomed to consider necessary. Some of them are more pretending, and have the canes plastered over and whitewashed, with tile roofs and other improvements; and there are a few, belonging to large proprietors, which are exceedingly neat and comfortable, approaching nearer our ideas of habitations for human beings. A large part of the dwellings in the towns are much of the same character; the residences of the better classes, however, are built of adobes, are of one story, and inclose large courts, which are entered under archways often constructed with great beauty. The court-yard has generally a number of shade trees, usually orange, making the corridors, upon which all the rooms open, exceedingly pleasant.

A range of mountains extends along its W. coast, at the distance of a few miles from the sea, attaining no great height until they approach the confines of Costa Rica, where they rise to an elevation of from 5,000 to 11,000 feet. Between this ridge and the lakes of Nicaragua and Leon, the land is moderately level; but along the borders of Honduras and San Salvador, lofty ridges again occur, running in various directions. In the central part of the state is an immense level tract, known as the plain of Nicaragua, comprising within its area, the lake of the same name. There are numerous volcanoes, many of them in an active state, in the republic, all bordering the Pacific coast, & almost entirely isolated, or but slightly connected with the main range; and few of them exceed 5,000 feet in elevation. Nicaragua has a considerable number of rivers; but none, except the San Juan (which see), are navigable in a commercial sense, nor otherwise much known; the principal are the Segovia or Escondido, the Lama or Siquia, all flowing E. The lakes are Nicaragua, and Leon or Managua. Veins of silver and copper ores of exceeding richness are found in many parts; but they remain almost all of them either unexplored, or only superficially worked. Gold, also, is said to exist. The climate is healthy, though various. In the interior and mountainous parts, the temperature is more dry and cool than bordering the coasts, where it is hot, and rather approaching to humid. By far the greater portion of Nicaragua consists of plains and gentle slopes, formed of a rich black loam. Unfortunately, agriculture is at a very low ebb, and but a small portion of this valuable land is made available. The productions are indigo, of which from 800 to 1,000 zeroons are manufactured yearly; sugar, coffee, cacao, and cotton, the last of superior quality, and formerly raised in large quantities; Indian corn, rice, beans, & plantains, the staple food of the people, are raised in abundance; wheat, also, is grown in the mountainous and cooler parts of the country. Fruits, of various kinds, are plentiful, including excellent oranges and lemons. One of the principal sources of wealth consists in cattle, of which there are great numbers in all parts, particularly in the districts on the E. side of the lake, where extensive and excellent pasturage is met with. The chief exports of the state are indigo, Nicaragua wood, and hides. The executive has the title of supreme director, with 2 counsellors: a legislative chamber and senate. From the reports of the Minister of Finance, it was estimated that the receipts into the state treasury for the year ending 30th June, 1851, would amount to $122,682, and the expenses to $173,646, leaving a deficit of $50,946. This, added to the standing debt of the state, $523,905, makes a total debt of $574,869. (See Central America.)

NICARAGUA (LAKE OF), an extensive sheet of water, republic of Nicaragua, C. A., 90 m. long, N.W. to S.E.; greatest breadth 40 m.; mean, 30 m.; 128 ft. above the Pacific, from which it is separated by a narrow range of volcanic mountains. The river San Juan de Nicaragua flows from its S.E. extremity, & enters the Caribbean Sea, & at its N.W. extremity it is connected with the smaller lake of Managua, or Leon, by the river Penaloya. About 100 yards from the beach, there is generally a depth of about 2 fathoms; in other parts, all the intermediate soundings between 5 and 15 fathoms are found. Water-fowl are abundant, & fish of an excellent quality are taken in large numbers. Alligators, also, of great size, are numerous. It contains some islands & several groups of islets, all of volcanic origin. Of the former, Zapatera, Ometepet, & Madera, are the largest, being several miles in circuit. Zapatera is mountainous, rising nearly to 2,000 feet in height, & is uninhabited; but Ometepet is occupied by an industrious race of Indians, who raise Indian corn and other vegetables, & possess some cattle. Madera is joined to Ometepet by a low neck of land, which is frequently overflowed; in form, it is a huge mound of more than 4,000 feet high, covered with cedar wood. The islets are generally conical in shape, and seldom exceed 3 or 4 acres in area; they are covered with verdure, and on many of them are cultivated patches of ground, & crowning their summits is a dense green back ground of plantations, & surrounded by palms, & the papaya, with its great golden fruit, are the picturesque cane huts of the inhabitants. On one of the smaller islands, Pensacolo, numerous relics of antiquity have been recently found, consisting of huge, elaborately-sculptured stones, massive idols, & figures of monstrous animals. The material is, in every case, black basalt, & the cutting exhibits great freedom and skill in workmanship. Steamers now ply on the lake, which forms a link in one of the routes across the great isthmus of Central America.

The river San Juan reaches the ocean by several mouths. The divergence takes place about 20 miles from the sea, forming a low delta, penetrated by numerous canals, or, as they are called on the Lower Mississippi, bayous, & lagunas. The principal branch is the Colorado, which carries off at least two-thirds of the water of the river, and which empties into the ocean some ten or fifteen miles to the southward of the port. There is an almost impassable bar at the entrance, which would preclude the ascent of vessels even if the depth of water above permitted of their proceeding after it was passed. The little steamer "Orus," nevertheless, after repeated trials, succeeded in passing it. There is another small channel called the Tauro, which reaches the sea midway between the port and the mouth of the Colorado. The branch emptying into the harbor, the one through which the ascending and descending boats pass, carries off only about one-third of the water of the river. It too has a bar at the mouth, i. e., at its point of debouchure into the harbor, upon which, at low tide, there are but three or four feet of water. This passed, the bed of the river is wide & studded with low islands; but excepting in the channel, which is narrow & crooked, the water is very shallow. It has been suggested that the Colorado branch might be dammed, & a greater column of water thrown into the other, or San Juan branch. But the suggestion can only be made by those who are wholly unacquainted with the subject. Allowing it to be possible to build a dam, the stream would probably find a new channel to the sea; or if it took the direction of the harbor, fill it up during the first rainy season with sand, or at once destroy the sandy barriers which now protect & form it. It cannot be made navigable for ships or vessels of any kind, except of the lightest draught, by any practicable system of improvements. The boats used upon the river for carrying freight & passengers are exaggerated canoes, called bongos. Some are hollowed from a single tree, but the better varieties are built, with some degree of skill, from the timber of the cedro, a very light & durable kind of wood which grows abundantly about the lakes. The largest of these carry from eight to ten tons, and draw two or three feet of water when loaded. They are long, & rather deep and narrow, & have, when fully manned, from eight to twelve oarsmen, who drive the boat by means of long sweeps & setting-poles. Sails are seldom if ever used, except upon the lake. The masts are unshipped and left at the head of the river in descending, & resumed again in returning. These boats have a small space near the stern called the "chopa," covered with a board roof, a thatch of palm leaves, or with hides, which is assigned to the passengers. The rest of the boat is open, & the oarsmen, or as they call themselves marineros (sailors), are without protection, & sleep upon their benches at night, covered only with their blankets, & with the gunwale of the boat for a common pillow. The captain, or patron, is the steersman, & occupies a narrow deck at the stern, called the pinota, upon which he also sleeps, coiling himself up in a knot, if the boat is small & the pinota narrow. The freight, if liable to damage from exposure, is covered with raw hides, which, between sun & rain, soon diffuse an odor very unlike the perfumes which are said to load the breezes of Arabia the Blest. The usual freightage from San Juan to Grenada, a distance of 160 or 170 miles, is from 30 to 50 cents per cwt.; if the articles are bulky it is more. The boatmen are paid from seven to eight dols. the trip, down from Grenada & back, which usually occupies from twenty to thirty days, although with proper management it might be made in less time. Time, however, in these regions is not regarded as of much importance, & everything is done very leisurely.

Columbus coasted along the entire eastern shore of Central America, from Cape Honduras to Nombre de Dios, or Chagres, in 1502, & was probably the first discoverer of the Port of San Juan. In 1529, Captain Diego Machuca, residing in the city of Grenada, on Lake Nicaragua, undertook the exploration of that lake, discovered its outlet, passed down the San Juan to the port at its mouth, & sailed thence to Nombre de Dios. The principal rapids in the stream still bear his name. We are informed by the historian Gonzalo Fernandez de Oviedo y Valdez, who was in Nicaragua in 1529, & was personally acquainted with Machuca, that the latter projected a colony at the mouth of the river, but was interrupted in his design by Robles, commandant at Nombre de Dios, who contemplated the same enterprise. At how early a date the Spanish made establishments at San Juan is not known; but it is a historical fact that early in the seventeenth century a fort existed at San Carlos, which was captured by the English in 1665, but recovered by De Mencos & De Caldas, officers of Spain, in the then Vice Royalty of Guatemala. In consequence of this event a royal decree was issued, command ing that the entrance of the river should be fortified; which order was carried into effect by Don Fernando de Escobeda, who examined the port & river, & built a fort in obedience to his instructions. It is also a historical fact, that at the period of the rebuilding of the Fort of San Juan, on the river above, about 1727, a garrison existed here. At that time not less than 12 military stations existed on the river; the first was at San Carlos, at the head of the stream; the second at the mouth of the Rio Savalos; the third, two leagues below the mouth of the Rio Poco Sol; the fourth, the Castle of San Juan; the fifth, the Island of Bartola; sixth, a high bank below the Rapids de los Valos, called "Diamante," seventh, at the Rapids of Machuca; eighth, on an island at the mouth of the River San Carlos; ninth, at the mouth of the Rio San Francisco; tenth, at the mouth of the Serapiqui; eleventh, at the point called "Conception," opposite an island of the same name; & twelfth, at the Port of San Juan itself, with an intermediate temporary station called "Rosario."

The commerce of Nicaragua with Europe & the West Indies was always carried on through this port; & we have records of as early a date as 1665, of vessels clearing for the ports of Spain from the city of Grenada. The port of San Juan was made a port of entry by royal order of the King of Spain, dated February 26, 1796. By a royal order of the 27th of March following, regulations were made for promoting the settlement of the country in the neighborhood of that port, among which was one authorizing the introduction, in the ports of Spain, of dye & other woods cut there, or of coffee grown there, free of duty. From this period an augmented military force was kept up at San Juan, & in 1821 additional defences were erected for their protection, as may be seen by the order of the Capt. General of Guatemala, of the date of May 2, 1821. Upon the declaration of independence, the royal troops were expelled by the patriots of Nicaragua, by whom the port was undisputedly occupied until the British seizure in 1848.

NICARAGUA, city, republic of Nicaragua. Situated on the W. shore of the lake, 38 S.E. Granada. Pop. 8,000. It has 2 or 3 churches, but possesses very little trade.

NICARIA, Icaria, an isl. of the Grecian Archipelago, belonging to Turkey, 12 m. W. Samos. Lat. 37° 35′ N., lon. 26° 10′ E. Area, 50 sq. m. Pop. 1,000. Surface mountainous. Principal product, timber. It has only a few vills., & no object of much interest. It is famous in mythology for the death near it of Icarus, after his reputed aërial flight (whence its name).

NICASTRO, a town of Naples, prov. Calab. Ult., cap. dist., on the W. side of the Apennines, 24 m. S. Cosenza. Pop. 10,000. It is straggling & mean, but enclosed by walls, outside of which are many olive grounds & orchards. In its castle, Henry, the son of the Emperor Fred. II., was confined. It is an archbishop's see. Near it are some mineral baths. It suffered greatly by the earthquake of 1638.

NICCOTTOO, p. o., Arkansas co., Ark.

NICE (Ital. Nizza, anc. Nicæa), a seaport & episcopal city of N. Italy, cap. div., 98 m. S.W. Turin, with an excellent port on the Mediterranean, 4 m. E. of the French frontier. Pop. (including garrison) 33,811. It is situated in a plain, immediately W. & N. an old castle on a height, surrounded by bastioned walls, close & ill-built, but its suburbs are handsome. Chief edifices, a palace, cathedral, convents, & hospitals; a theatre, bath establishments, an English chapel, and a triumphal arch. The port on the E. beyond Monte Albano, is protected by a mole. The beauty of its situation, & the salubrity of its climate attract a great number of strangers. It has manufs. of wine, oil, silk and perfumery, and is a free port. Nice has been often taken by the French, & was, under the Empire, cap. dep. of the Maritime Alps. It is the birth-place of the painter Vanloo, & the astronomer Cassini. Marshal Massena was born in its vicinity. [Nizza & Isnik.] Pop. of prov. 1848, 118,377.

NICETOWN, v., Philadelphia co., Pa. Contains a Roman Catholic church & 75 inhabitants.

NICHOL, t., Wellington co., Can. W. Pop. 1852, 2,150.

NICHOLAS, county, Va. Centrally situated toward the W. part of the state. Area, 880 sq. ms. Surface mountainous; soil generally fertile. Drained by Gauley & Elk rivers and their branches. NILE, p. o., Alleghany co., N. Y.

NILE, Nilus, a great river of E. Africa, formed by the union of the Bahr-el-Abiad (White river), and the Bahr-el-Azrek (Blue river). The first, which is regarded as the true Nile, is supposed to rise on the E. edge of the table-land of E. Africa, about lat. 2° S., lon. 34° E., but its source is unknown. Expeditions sent by the Pacha of Egypt in 1840-2 traced it to lat. 4° 42′ N., in lon. 30° 58′ E. Here the navigation was interrupted by a ledge of rock; it flows generally N., with a width of from 1 to 2 m., & joins the Bahr-el-Azrek at Khartum in Nubia (lat. 15° 37′ N.). The second rises in Abyssinia in lat. 10° 59′ 25″ N., lon. 36° 55′ 39″ E. It flows N. 55 m., when it enters Lake Dembeah on the S.W.; emerging from the lake on the S.E. it flows in the form of a curve first S., then W. & N.W., traversing in its course several mountain chains, & descending by numerous falls into the plains of Nubia, where it passes Sennaar. Its confluence with the Bahr-el-Abiad forms the Nile, which from this point flows N. E., N. & N.W. past Halfay, Shendy, & Berber, to lat. 19° 20′, where it turns to the S.W., forming a wide curve called the great bend. In lat. 18° it again turns N.ward & continues in a northerly direction past Dongola, Girgeh, Siout, & Cairo, to its mouth, near Assouan, & from the junction of its head streams to its delta, its basin is formed by two parallel chains of mntns, which in some places close upon it & form rapids, & in others open up & leave fine plains between them & the river. It forms the first cataract (in ascending) near Essouan, lat. 24° 10′ N.; the 2d being in lat. 21° 52′ 20″ N.; & the 3d in lat. 19° 40′ N. Its banks are generally elevated in Nubia, they are less so in Middle Egypt, & absolutely flat in the Delta. From Essouan to the sea, the average fall is 2 inches to a mile, & its mean velocity is about 3 m. an hour. Its length from supposed source, following its bends to the sea, is about 3,000 m. (direct distance 2,300 m.) The delta of the Nile commences in lat. 30° 7′ N., where its waters spread out into numerous streams in the form of a triangle, extending at its base on the Mediterranean, over a space of 120 m.; the two principal mouths are the W. or Rosetta branch, & the E. or Damietta branch. The others are the Bourlos and Dibe mouths. The system of the Nile is an anomaly among rivers; in ascending its course no affl. is met with for 1,400 m., the first being the Atbara in Nubia, which joins it on the right, 27 m. S. Berber. It is the only great tropical riv., which by its periodical inundations, fertilizes a country surrounded throughout a great part of its course, by sandy deserts. The waters begin to rise in June, & they subside in September. [Egypt.] From time immemorial the Egyptians have made use of canals for the purpose of extending the inundations. The rise of the Nile appears due to the periodical rains which fall in the tropical regions of Africa from June to September. In Upper Egypt the swelling of the river amounts to about 30 feet, and at Cairo to 24 feet, perpendicular.

Indians, 831. Federal representative pop. 753,538.
Madison and Yadkins counties erected since 1850.

Physical Features, &c.—Along the entire coast of this state there is a ridge of sand separated from the main land in some places by narrow, & in other places by broad sounds and bays. The passages or inlets through it are shallow and dangerous, Ocracoke inlet being the only one through which vessels pass. Capes Hatteras & Lookout are projecting points in this belt, and off them, particularly the former, is the most dangerous navigation on the coast of the United States. Cape Fear is on an island off the mouth of Cape Fear river. For 60 or 80 miles from the shore the country is level, the streams sluggish, and there are many swamps and marshes. The soil is sandy and poor, excepting on the margins of the streams, where it is frequently very fertile. The natural growth of this region is mostly the pitch-pine. This tree affords tar, pitch, turpentine, and lumber, which constitute an important part of the exports of the state. In the swamps rice of a fine quality is raised. Back of the flat country & extending to the lower falls of the rivers is a belt of land about 40 miles wide, of a moderately uneven surface; a sandy soil, and of which the pitch-pine is the prevailing natural growth. Above the falls the country is hilly, the streams have a more rapid current, & the country is more fertile, producing wheat, rye, flax, oats, & barley. The western part of the state is an elevated table-land about 1,800 ft. above the level of the sea with some high ranges & very elevated summits. Mitchells Peak in Yancy county, 6,720 feet high, is the culminating point of the Alleghany mountains. Roan Mountain is 6,038 feet and Grandfather Mountain is 5,556 feet high. Throughout the state Indian corn is raised, & in some parts considerable cotton. In the low country, grapes, plums, blackberries & strawberries grow spontaneously, and on the intervales canes grow luxuriantly, the leaves of which continuing green during winter furnish food for cattle. In the elevated country oak, walnut, lime, & cherry trees of a large growth abound. Principal minerals coal, iron, & gold.

There were in this state in 1850, 5,453,975 acres of land improved, and 15,543,008 unimproved land in farms. Cash value of farms, $67,891,766, and the value of implements & machinery, $3,931,532. Live stock,—Horses, 148,693; asses & mules, 25,259; milch cows, 221,799; working oxen, 37,309; other cattle, 434,402; sheep, 595,249; swine, 1,812,813; value of live stock, $17,717,647.

Tonnage of the state 1853, 56,375 tons.

Government, &c.—The constitution of the state was adopted in December 1776, & revised in 1835. The senate & house of commons are elected biennially by the people. The senate consists of 50 members, & the house of commons of 120. The senate is chosen by districts, the number being apportioned by the amount of taxes paid. The members of the house of commons apportioned among the counties according to their population. The governor is chosen for two years by the qualified voters, & is eligible only four years in six. There is an executive council of 7 members chosen biennially by a joint vote of both houses. In case of the death of the governor, his duties devolve upon the speaker of the senate. The judges of the supreme court are chosen by a joint ballot of both houses of the legislature, & hold their office during good behavior. The attorney-general is appointed by the legislature for four years. The right of suffrage extends to all free white persons 21 years of age, who have been inhabitants of the state for twelve months previous to an election, but in order to vote for a senator a freeman must possess a freehold of 50 acres of land. The legislature meets biennially at Raleigh on the second Monday of November, & the governor is chosen in August preceding.

The first permanent settlement in this state was on the eastern bank of the Chowan river, about 1660, by emigrants, who, in consequence of religious persecution, fled from Nansemond, Virginia. The constitution of the United States was adopted in convention Nov. 27th, 1789. Yeas, 193; nays, 75.

Soil among the Cheviots a gravelly loam, producing the finest short pasture; among the other mountains a black peat, often swampy; & in the centre & E., moist loams or clay. Agriculture fully on a par with the best farming cos. Wheat, oats, beans, barley & turnips all yield the finest crops. Cattle, mostly short-horned, are bred & fed with acknowledged skill. The native Cheviot sheep possesses a deserved celebrity. Estates & farms mostly large. Sheep farms very extensive. Leases of from 7 to 21 years common. Farmsteads & cottages good. The principal mineral is coal, for the export of which, this co. is pre-eminently noted. The pitmen are a well-paid & greatly improved class. Lead & iron are also wrought. Manufs. chiefly confined to Newcastle. The Newcastle & Carlisle, Great N. of England, Newcastle & Berwick, & Caledonian railroads traverse this co., & many small railroads connect the coal pits with the rivers. Northumberland is divided into 6 wards, & 97 pas. in the diocese of Durham, & N. circuit. Principal towns, Newcastle, Tynemouth, North Shields, Alnwick, Hexham, & Morpeth. The N. & S. divisions of the co. each send 2 mem. to H. of C., & its boroughs (exclusive of Berwick) send 4 mems. Under the Britons Northumberland formed part of the confederacy of the Brigantes: under the Heptarchy it formed a part of the kingdom of Northumbria. After the conquest, it was granted to the illustrious family of Percy, to a descendent of whom, through a female branch, it still gives title of Duke.

The great peninsula of Norway & Sweden, is a continuous mountain mass traversed by valleys. These mountains, the Scandinavian Alps, cover more than half the surface of Norway, & extend from N. to S., under the names of the Kiöleng Dovre-Field or Dofrines, Land-Field & Hardanger-Field. The W. & N. parts of the peninsula form a continuous plateau, descending abruptly towards the W.; while, on the other side, the mountains slope gently to the S.E. The measured points are Skageslöestinden, the highest known part of the Hurungen, on the limits of the Sogne & Gul brandsdal, 8,070 feet; Snachattan in the Dovre-Field, 7,549 feet; Lodals Kaaben, in the Sogne-Field, 6,573 feet; Gausta-Field, in Tellemarken, 6,162 feet; Sulitelma, culminating point of the Kiolen, between Nordland & Swedish Lapland, 5,956 feet; Folgefonden glacier, on the border of the stift Bergen, 5,135 feet. Nearly half the surface is under 2,050 feet absolute height. The only plains are those formed by the table-lands between the stifts Aggershuus & Bergen, which extend from 60 to 80 m. in length, & have an elevation of 3,600 to 4,620 feet. The isolated mountain peaks on these table lands rise far above the snow line. The mountains of Norway contain rich minerals; but, from the difficulty of transport & the want of fuel, mining industry is but little developed. The only mines in operation are those of silver, copper, iron, cobalt, and chrome. The chief product is iron, the mines of which are situated mostly in the Gulf of Christiania; the silver mine of Konsberg is, at present, one of the richest in Europe, & next to the copper mine of Roraas, the most important in the kingdom. The principal valleys are confined to the E. side of the peninsula; the longest is the Osterdal, watered by the Glommen, which with its continuation, the Solö & Oudal, is 215 m. in length. The next in extent and the most fertile, is the Guldbrandsdal, watered by the Laugen. Narrow belts betw. the coasts & the commencement of the plateaux, are the only low lands in Norway; the most extensive of these surrounds the Gulf of Trondhjeim. The W. shores are penetrated by an immense number of gulfs or fiords, which occasionally extend deep into the table lands. The chief of these are,—from S. to N., the Bukkefiord, Hardanger, Trondhjeim, Saltens, Ofoden, Porsang & Varang fiords. The most extensive gulf on the S. coast is that of Christiania. Numerous peninsulas separate the fiords; among the most remarkable of which are Cape Nord-Kyn on the N., & Cape Stadt on the W. coast. Some of the fiords form excellent harbors; but the immense number of mountainous isls., & rocky islets which border the coast, render access difficult. The largest of these archipelagoes are the Lofoden islands, separated from the continent by the Vest-fiord; and, further N., the islands of Magerö, Sorö, Ringvalsö, Hvalöe, & Senjen. Between these island groups & the continent, there is a wide passage for coasting vessels. A great part of the E. side of Norway is covered with lakes, which, however, are generally of small extent, many of them are situated at great elevations in the table-land; among these the Bygdinsee, 15 to 20 m. long, is 3,490 feet above the sea. The lakes abound in fish. The river systems of Norway are of the utmost importance in the economy of the country; the smaller streams are emp. in driving the machinery of mines, corn & saw mills, & in floating timber to the larger rivers; these serve also as the chief means of communication in winter, when they are covered with strong ice. The largest rivers are on the E. slope of the plateau, flowing to the Skager-rack; these are the Glommen, Lougen, Fæmund, Laaven, Beina, the Namsen, & Tana. Ships enter the mouths of some of these rivers for 5 or 10 m., but none of them are navigable on account of numerous waterfalls (fos), which all of them form; of these the more celebrated are the Sarpenfos on the Glommen, near Fredrikstad, & the Rukaufos, in the dist. Tellemarken, which falls 513 ft. perpendicular. Vöringsfos, in the dist. Hardanger, has a perpendicular fall of 870 to 920 feet.

Scandinavia, from its vicinity to the sea, has a remarkably mild climate considering its northern position; the snow line is much higher than in corresponding latitudes in other countries: in lat. 61° it is 5,500 feet; & in lat. 70° 3,500 feet above the sea. In Siberia the cultivation of grain ceases at lat. 60°; while in Norway it extends to lat. 70° N. The mean annual temp. at the level of the sea is, at North Cape, 32°; Trondhjeim (lat. 63° 5′) 40°; Ullensvank in Hardanger-Fiord (at. 60°) 45°; Christiania (lat. 59° 54′) 41° Fahr. The sea never freezes, even at N. Cape, but the shallow water of the Skager-rack is occasionally frozen in winter; about 1-88th part of the surface is covered with perpetual snow, & vast glaciers descend from the S. plateau; the largest of these are the Folgefonden, in Hardanger, lat. 6° °, which descends to 5,100 feet, & the Snaebræn N. of Sogne-Fiord. The year is nearly divided between winter & summer; spring is almost unknown, & the autumn is cold & rigorous; snow covers the ground from the beginning of November till the end of March. In January & February the temp. is usually from 14° to 18°, & often as low as 2° Fahr. Summer lasts from May to September, during which the temp. is often as high as 108° Fahr. In the month of March the surface is strewed with ashes, earth, or sand, by which means the snow is melted, and from this process, combined with the great heat & the length of the day, 8 to 12 weeks are sometimes sufficient for sowing, ripening, & reaping the crops in the interior. The climate of the W. coast, though milder than that of the S. or the interior, is deteriorated by excessive humidity; the W. wind blowing over the Atlantic carries moisture, which is intercepted by the mountains, & precipitated in the form of rain, to the amount of 80 inches annually. While the E. wind brings extreme drought. The vegetation of Norway varies according to climate & position. Among trees, the pine tribe are the most numerous. The fir, which is found in lat. 66° 20′, at an elevation of 4,000 feet; & the pine (pinus sylvestris), form vast & valuable forests in Aggerhuus, Christiansand, & Trondhjeim. The forests of fir extend N. to the Polar circle, & those of pine beyond it. The oak forms fine forests in the amts Jarlsberg & Laurvig, & especially in Christiansand. The birch attains its highest northern latitude. Fruit trees are not indigenous in Norway, although the wild apple is common in the lower regions, & the cherry is widely distributed. Flowers are successfully cultivated in the gardens of the S. & W. The principal grain of Norway is barley; the other cerealia are cultivated only in favored spots in the S. Barley attains the highest northern latitude, & the greatest elevation; in lat. 59° 25′, it is grown at a height of 2,838 feet; the extreme limit of its culture is lat. 70°, but there it only ripens at an elevation of 65 to 100 feet; its profitable culture is confined to a narrow belt of coast land, & to the agricultural colonies of Molselv & Barodal, in Nordland. The corn raised is insufficient for home consumption. The potato has of late been extensively cultivated. The rearing of cattle is the chief occupation of the pop. of the mountainous districts, who, like the Swiss, leave the vills. & spend the summer with their flocks & herds in the upper valleys. From the simple habits of the pop., & the excellent climate, the value of life is understood to be higher in Norway than in any other country of Europe. The horses, a small but hardy breed, are extensively exported to Sweden, England, & Scotland. Sheep are of an inferior breed, & yield coarse wool. In the N., the reindeer is the only resource of the Laplander. The most destructive wild animals are the brown bear, wolf, & lynx; these, with the fox & others, are hunted for their skins. The eagle is so destructive to sheep & lambs, that a private company is established for its extirpation. Game of all kinds is abundant, & there are no game-laws. The chief objects of the chase are the deer, elk, reindeer, & hare; the seal, which abounds on all the coasts, the fish-otter; & among birds, the grouse & the caperkailzie. The coast literally swarms with sea-fowl; the wild goose and eider duck are numerous; the swan appears on the S. coast in winter, & ducks of various kinds abound on the coasts & in the lakes and rivers. In the small uninhabited isles off the N. coast, vast numbers of the eggs of sea-fowl are procured. Fishing forms the most important branch of industry. Whales are occasionally taken on the coast of Finmark; salmon abound in the gulfs & rivers; there are extensive beds of oysters on all the coasts, & the pearl oyster is found in many of the rivers.

Manufactures, properly so called, scarcely exist in Norway. Brandy distilleries & saw mills are the only extensive branches of industry; next to these are forges & metal foundries, the produce of which is exported in a raw state, except what is used in the manufacture of arms at Konigsberg, and in the manufactures of iron ware and nails. The manufacture of cloth, linen, & cotton, as well as the preparation of skins & leather, are almost entirely domestic. The other manufs. comprise those of glass, paper, oil, gunpowder, soap, tobacco, & sugar refining. Owing to the difficulty of transport, all the seats of industry, & the only towns, are on the coast, & chiefly on the Gulf of Christiania. Ship-building is actively carried on in the ports. In the middle ages, the commerce of Norway consisted exclusively in the exportation of fish, & this is still the most important article of trade. Next to this is the export of timber, which was commenced by the Dutch in the 16th century; and, lastly, the produce of the mines & metal forges. The timber exported annually amounts to 200,000 lasts, value 1,655,000 specie dollars. The principal forests are in the interior; the timber is felled in autumn & winter, & is conveyed over the snow to the coast. Holland is now the chief market for Norwegian timber. Fish is exported from all the towns on the W. coast, but Bergen is the chief entrepôt. The most important branches of this trade are dried fish & salted herrings. The export of mineral products is less than might be expected, from the number of mines; the principal are iron, copper, & silver. The chief imports are salt, grain, & colonial produce. Commerce in the interior of the country is greatly impeded for want of means of communication; none of the rivs. are navigable except near their mouths. Good roads exist only between the towns of the S. coast and the principal valleys in Nordland & Finmark; the usual communication is by sea. Among the numerous isls. on the W. coast, there are violent & irregular currents, which render the coast navigation dangerous. Among these is the celebrated Mal-Ström, or Moskenæs-Strom, the danger from which has been greatly exaggerated, since it can, at nearly all times, be passed over even by open boats. Regular communications have successively been established between the principal towns of the coast from Christiania to Hammerfest, & steam vessels ply in the Gulf of Christiania, & on the Lakes of Miösen & Tyrifiord. Norway has a national discount bank, established 1817, which has the exclusive right of issuing paper money.

Nearly the whole pop. of the kingdom are Northmans, or Normans. The Laplanders & Fins people the entire of the N. portion of the country; those of the mountains, the most numerous, live on the products of their reindeer; and those of the coast, on fishing. The Norwegian, or Norsk, is one of the Teutonic, or German languages, & is nearly allied to the Swedish & Danish. The constitution of Eidsvold, modified by the Storthing, or National Assembly, after its adhesion to the treaty of Kiel, is the fundamental law of the kingdom; its principal conditions are—that Norway is a free, independent, and indivisible state, only united under the same sovereign with Sweden. Lutheranism is the state religion, in which Lutherans are obliged to train their children. Other religionists are tolerated, except Jews & Jesuits, who are excluded. The govt. is a constitutional monarchy; the throne is hereditary in the male line; in case of failure of heirs, the king is elected by the representatives of Sweden & Norway. There are few countries in Europe where elementary instruction is more widely spread than in Norway; every peasant can read, & many can write & cast accounts; the law forbids the marriage of any one who cannot procure a certificate of confirmation, & this is only given to those who can read. Every individual of the age of 20 not confirmed, is liable to be sent to a house of correction to receive the necessary instruction. In all the towns there are elementary schools, & many have Sabbath & private schools. On its separation from Denmark, Norway had only four classical schools; since then nine have been added. Most of the towns have superior burgher schools. The chief seat of learning is the University of Christiania; there is a military school at Christiania, & a school of marine at Frederikshavn. Six normal schools are supported by the state. There are excellent public libraries, museums, & scientific collections in the different towns. The principal literary productions are periodicals. There are hospitals in all the principal towns & in the provinces. Each commune is bound to maintain its own poor, & mendicity is punished as a crime. The state maintains magazines of reserve for grain, which is supplied to the inhabitants on payment of a fixed amount of interest. In 1851 the army amounted to 23,484 men; & the navy, 2 frigates, 10 smaller vessels, & 5 steamers, having in all 50,000 men. Public revenue 1851–54, estimated at 3,200,000 specie dollars. Since 1836 all direct taxes have been abolished; the public revenue is derived from customs, imports, & state property.

In 1380, Olaf IV., King of Denmark, & heir to the throne of Norway, united the crowns of the two kingdoms, & this union lasted till 1814, when Norway was ceded by the King of Denmark, & annexed to Sweden by the allied powers, at the treaty of Kiel, 14th Jan., 1814. The cession was at first rejected by the Norwegians, but afterwards recognized, & the two crowns of Norway & Sweden were declared united on the 4th Nov., 1814.

NORWEGIAN, t., Schuylkill co., Pa. Surface hilly & mountainous. It is an important centre of the coal mines & trade. Drained by Schuylkill r. & its branches. It has a flouring m., 14 saw m., a powder fac., 8 schools. Pop. 1840, 3,812; 1850, 2,642. (See Pottsville & E. Norwegian.)

NORWELL, a par. of England, co. Nottingham. Area, 3,720 ac. Pop. 957.

NORWICH, p-t., Windsor co., Vt., 46 S.S.E. Montpelier, 490 W. Surface uneven; soil fertile, adapted to grain, grazing, & fruit. Conn. riv. runs on its E. border, across which is a bridge, connecting it with Hanover, N. H. Drained by Ompompanoosuc r., Bloody brook, & Smalley's brook, which afford water power. The v. is pleasantly situated on a plain, & contains a Congregational church, Norwich university, an academy, a number of handsome dwellings, sevl. stores, & about 300 inhabs. The Norwich university, founded in 1834, has a president & 5 professors, 100 alumni, 59 students, & 1,400 vols. in its libraries. Commencement on the third Wednesday & Thursday in August. There are in the t. 3 grist m., 2 saw m., an academy, 20 schools. Pop. 1840, 2,218; 1850, 1,978.

NORWICH, p-t., Hampshire co., Mass., 104 W. Boston, 381 W. Drained by Westfield r., which affords excellent water power. Surface mostly rough & hilly; soil fertile. It has 7 schools. Pop. 1840, 750; 1850, 750.

NORWICH, city, & semi-capital of New London co., Ct., is situated at the head of navigation, on Thames r., in 41° 33′ N. lat., & 72° 7′ W. lon., 13 N. New London, 39 S.E. Hartford, 38 S.W. Providence, R. I., 50 N. E. New Haven, 357 W. Pop. 1830, city, 3,144; total in t. 5,179: 1840, city, 4,200; t., excepting the city, 3,039; total, 7,239; & in 1850, 10,265; 1854, 12,000. It consists of 3 parts—Chelsea Landing, or Norwich City, the Town, and Westville, formerly called Bean Hill. Norwich City, or the Landing, is situated on the point of land between the Shetucket & Yantic rivers, which here unite to form the Thames. The site is singularly romantic, on the steep declivity of a high hill, which causes the streets to rise above each other, like terraces, & the houses in the rear to overlook those in front. The t., 2 m. N.W., is on a pleasant valley, surrounded by hills, which on the E. rise rapidly from the street, & afford commanding situations for dwellings. In the centre of the place is a large triangular public ground, or square, surrounded by houses and stores, on which fronts the principal church. Between the landing & town is a beautiful plain, which furnishes fine situations for elegant residences. In the N.W. part of the city, on the road to Hartford, is Westville, which contains a number of pleasant dwellings & several manufacturing estabs. Within the city are a court house, jail, town hall, 6 banks, aggregate cap. $1,195,275, 2 insurance companies, a savings' bank; 16 churches,—3 Baptist, 3 Congregational, 2 Episcopal, 3 Methodist, 1 Roman Catholic, 1 Unitarian, & 1 Universalist,—a high school for boys, an academy for females, 110 stores, 4 woollen fac., together employing 175 persons, manufac. broadcloths, cassimeres, flannels, satinets, &c.; 4 cotton fac., with an agg. number of 12,500 spindles, emp. 350 persons, & make annually 3,775,000 yards of sheetings, &c., a carpet fac., with 31 looms, & emp. 30 persons; a bleachery & calendering works, emp. 35 persons; an extensive railr. car fac., the Norwich steam mills, 3 iron foundries, a paper fac., 3 machine shops, a piano forte fac., 2 printing offices, issuing 3 weekly newspapers, & a variety of small manfacturing estabs. A cove sets up about a mile from the Thames, over the mouth of which is a bridge. At the head of this cove, the Yantic r. enters it by a singularly romantic cataract, affording a fine site for mills & manufactories. The village around it is called Yanticville, and contains a Methodist church, 7 stores, a paper fac., & a cotton fac., 7,000 sp., emp. 200 persons. In the rocks which form the bed of the cataract will often be found circular perpendicular holes, 5 or 6 ft. deep, evidently formed by a stone or stones whirled round within them by the force of the water. These holes are so regular as to appear like a work of art, & are a curiosity. From a high projecting rock, which overhangs the foot of these falls, the Mohegan Indians formerly plunged to destruction, rather than to fall into the hands of the Narragansets, who were pursuing them. A mile E. of the landing, on the Shetucket, is Greenville, containing a Methodist church, a machine shop, & 2 paper facs. Steamboats ply between Norwich & New York, & a railroad connects it with Worcester, Mass., & thence with Boston, one with New York, via New London & New Haven, & one with Hartford, Palmer, Mass., &c.

NORWICH, p-t., & capital of Chenango co., N. Y., 112 W. Albany, 336 W. The surface is hilly, with a wide valley extending through the t., from N. to S., through which Chenango r. flows, & on which are fertile & highly cultivated flats. The elevated parts are adapted to grazing. The v. is beautifully situated on the right bank of Chenango r., & on the Chenango canal, and contains a court house, jail, a bank, 4 churches, — 1 Baptist, 1 Episcopal, 1 Methodist, and 1 Presbyterian,—20 stores, 2 grist m., a saw m., a tannery, an oil m., a fulling m., a piano forte fac., a coach lace fac., a furnace & machine shop, 2 printing offices, each issuing a weekly newspaper, & 1,500 inhabitants. There are in the t. 4 fulling m., a woollen fac., an iron foundry, 3 tanneries, 4 grist m., 8 saw m., a brewery, an academy, 20 schools. Pop. 1840, 4,145; 1850, 3,615. (See North Norwich.)

NORWICH, v., Oyster Bay t., Queens co., N. Y. It contains a Methodist church, 3 stores, & about 200 inhabs.

NORWICH, p-t., McKean co., Pa., 190 N.W. Harrisburg, 272 W. The v. is situated on Potato creek, & contains a number of dwellings. Pop. of the t. 1840, 184; 1850, 265.

NORWICH, t., Franklin co., O. Situated on the W. side of Scioto r. Pop. 1840, 731; 1850, 1,053.

NORWICH, t., Huron co., O., 15 S. Norwalk, 90 N. E. Columbus. Drained by Huron r. Pop. 1840, 676; 1850, 1,021.

NORWICH, p-v., Union t., Muskingum co., O., 65 E. Columbus, 328 W. Situated on the national road, and contains 2 churches, 6 stores, various mechanic shops, a brewery, a steam m., & 224 inhabs.

NORWICH, t., Oxford co., Can. W. Pop. 1852; 5,239.

NORWICH, a city, parl. bor., & river-port, of England, cap. co. Norfolk, & a co. of itself, on the Yare, or Wensum, here crossed by ten bridges, 18 m. W. Yarmouth, & 100 m. N. N. E. London, communicates by the N. & E. Counties railroad. Area of city & co., 4,325 ac. Pop. 1851, 68,195. The city, about 5 m. in circ., is bordered on the N. & E. by the river; elsewhere it was formerly enclosed by walls, flanked with towers & entered by twelve gates, but these have been mostly removed. On the S. & W. several new quarters have sprung up, & most of the hamlets of its co. now form suburbs continuous with the city. Streets generally very irregular; the market place is spacious. Near the centre of the city is the castle, a massive quadrangular Norman keep, now used for a prison, & surrounded by the remains of three successive lines of walls; the inner enclosure, or "castle precinct," being laid out in public walks. On the castle-hill are the new co. jail; & the co. hall, an edifice in the Tudor style. The cathedral, built between the 11th & 16th centuries, & very handsome, is 411 feet in length, 191 feet in breadth, & surmounted by a spire 315 feet in height, or inferior only to that of Salisbury. Around it are the cloisters, bishop's palace, deanery, & St. Ethelred & Erpingham gates, connecting the cathedral with the city. Norwich has more churches than any other English city, except the metropolis. St. Peter Mancroft is spacious; St. George, Colegate, St. Lawrence, & St. Saviour: several other churches have round towers, & belong apparently to the early Norman era. There are, besides, the Unitarian, an Independent, Baptist, Roman Catholic, two Friends' meeting houses, a synagogue, & many other dissenting places of worship. Many remains exist of old monastic edifices; & St. Andrew's hall, used for corporation & other festivities, & public meetings, was originally a part of a Dominican convent. The Guild-hall, containing a collection of portraits; the new city jail, the corn exchange, public library, theatre, cavalry barracks, & a large workhouse, are among the chief edifices. The great hospital charity, rev. about 7,000*l.* a year, supports many aged persons, & a grammar school. The boys' & girls' hospital, rev. about 4,000*l.*; Doughty's hospital, Norfolk & Norwich general hospital, blind asylum, Norfolk & Norwich literary institution, art-union, & a mechanics' institute, are among the most conspicuous public foundations. Norwich was long famous for its worsted manuf., established by Flemings, who settled in it in the time of Henry I., but this has declined in favor of the W. Riding of Yorkshire; & most of the yarns now wrought up at Norwich, are spun at Bradford, &c. Its principal manufs. are now bandanas, bombazines, shawls, gauzes, crape, silk fabrics of various kinds, mohair, fringe, sacking, & horse-hair fabrics; and, in 1839, there were in the city & vicinity, upwards of 4,000 looms in use, besides silk, worsted, & woollen mills, & one cotton mill. Norwich has also iron & brass foundries; snuff, oil, mustard, & corn mills; breweries & dyeing works. It has a branch of the Bank of England, & several private banks, & a large insurance company. It communicates by a canal with the Lowestoff navigation; & with Ely, Cambridge, & London, by the N. & E. Counties railroad. It returns 2 mems. to H. of C. It is the place of election for the E. division of Norfolk. Markets, Wednesday & Saturday. Throughout the civil war it was garrisoned for the Parliament. Archbishop Parker, Dr Kay, Dr Samuel Clarke, & Bishop, the translator of Herodotus, were natives of Norwich. The city is the seat of a triennial musical festival.

NORWICHTOWN, p-v., Norwich t., New London co., Ct., 37 S.E. Hartford, 355 W. Situated about 2 m. N. of the Landing, or Norwich City. It contains several streets, not very regularly laid out, 2 churches,—1 Congregational & 1 Methodist,—on a handsome public square,—several stores, & about 200 dwellings, and several extensive manufs.

NORWICHVILLE, p-v., Oxford co., Can. W., 95 W. Toronto, & contains a Methodist church, 5 stores, an iron foundry, a mill, & 450 inhabitants. Pop. of the t. of Norwich 1852, 5,239.

NOVA SCOTIA (French Acadia), a British province, forming a peninsula, connected with the mainland by an isthmus only 8 m. broad, having the Bay of Fundy on the one side, & Northumberland Strait on the other. It lies, including Cape Breton I., between lat. 43° 25′ & 46° N., & lon. 59° 45′ & 66° 30′ W., & is bounded N. by Northumberland Strait, which separates it from Prince Edward I., N.E. by the Gut of Canseau, flowing between it & the island of Cape Breton (which forms a part of the government of Nova Scotia), S. & S.E. by the Atlantic Ocean, W. by the Bay of Fundy, & N.W. by New Brunswick. Area, 18,746 sq. ms.

Nova Scotia contained in 1851, eighteen counties, as follow, with the population, inhabited houses, acres of dyked land, and of improved land, and value of real estate, were as follows:—

Its S.E. coast is remarkable for the number and capacity of its harbors; there being no fewer than twelve ports capable of receiving ships of the line, and fourteen of sufficient depth for merchant-men, between Halifax and Cape Canseau, a distance of not more than 110 m. The surface of Nova Scotia seldom rises to a height exceeding 600 feet above the level of the sea. A ridge of high land extends through the peninsula in a direction E. to W.; &, with less prominent hills & undulations, gives a pleasing variety to the scenery. The principal rivers of the province are the Annapolis and Shubenecadie; the latter rises in Grand lake, Halifax co., &, after a rapid & circuitous course of over 50 miles, enters Cobequid bay; by means of a canal, this r. forms a navig. communication from Halifax harbor to the Bay of Fundy. It is navigable for some distance. The rise & fall of the tide at the mouth is about 50 feet. The Annapolis, after a course of 75 ms, in which it receives the waters of Moose & Bear rivers, enters Annapolis bay. It is navigable for large vessels 20 m. above Annapolis. At Pictou, the East, West, & Middle rivers, all three navigable for large vessels, enter the harbor. The Avon receives the waters of the St. Croix, Kennetcook, and several others, & empties itself into the Bay of Mines; it is navigable to Windsor. The La Have, Mersey, & Medway; the Shelburne (which forms the fine harbor of that name); the Clyde, one of the most beautiful streams of Nova Scotia; the Tusket & its numerous tributaries; the St. Mary, which, at its embouchure, forms the fine harbor of St. Mary; the Maccau, Nappau, & Gaspereau, the Musquedoboit, Sale, & Jordon; these form but a few of numerous streams of Nova Scotia. The tide rises with astonishing rapidity in the Bay of Mines to the height of 75 feet, while on the S. shore, & in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, it does not rise more than 6 ft. There are but few large lakes; the largest is Lake Rosignol, about 30 m. in length; Lake George is another sheet of water of considerable size, & the entire peninsula is dotted over with innumerable small lakes. The mines & minerals of Nova Scotia, though but imperfectly explored, are known to be valuable. Granite, trap, & clay slate rocks predominate. The most abundant variety is the gray granite, which prevails along the shore, & is well adapted for mill-stones. Clay-slate, of fine quality, is of extensive formation in the E. section of the province, & graywacke slate along both shores of Chedabucto bay. Several extensive & beautiful grottoes are to be found on different parts of the coast; & grindstones of superior quality are obtained from a stratum of sandstone, found between the coal & limestone. Coal, & iron in combination with it, abounds in many places. Copper-ore also exists; but the attempts to work it have been hitherto unsuccessful; gypsum is plentiful, & furnishes an active & profitable trade. The soils of Nova Scotia are various: along the S. shore, the granite forms the basis, extending, in many places, 20 m. into the interior. This region is the least fertile; but there are elsewhere extensive alluvial tracts, producing the most abundant crops. Many fine fertile districts, also, are met with on the N. coast, along the banks of rivers & the heads of bays. The climate of Nova Scotia is affected by its almost insular position, & is characterized by a remarkable salubrity. The springs are to low; but the summer heats being for a brief season excessive, vegetation is singularly rapid, & the autumn is delightful. The thermometer ranges from 18° to 70°. It is estimated that about 7,000,000 ac. are still covered with primeval forests. There were in this province in 1851, 40,012 acres of dyked land, & 799,310 ac. of other improved land. Live stock.—Horses, 28,789; neat cattle, 150,557; milch cows, 86,856; sheep, 282,180; swine, 51,533.

Agricultural Products, &c.—Wheat, 297,157 bush. produced; rye, 61,438; Ind. corn, 37,475; oats, 1,384,137; peas & beans, 21,628; barley, 196,097; buckwheat, 170,310; potatoes, 1,986,789; pounds of butter made, 3,613,890; of cheese, 652,069; of maple sugar, 110,441; hay, 237,837 tons made; grass seeds, 3,686 bushels; & were made 89,976 gallons of malt & distilled liquors. Nova Scotia, however, does not yet supply her population with bread, even in good seasons; large importations of fine flour being yearly made from the United States. The apple orchards of the W. counties are very productive. Apples & cider are annually exported, & the domestic supply is cheap and abundant. Cattle & sheep are raised in considerable numbers, & are exported both to New Brunswick and Newfoundland; but the breeds are inferior, & little attention is paid to their improvement. The cod & haddock fisheries are actively prosecuted all along the S. coast. Mackerel & herrings are also taken in great quantities; but the salmon fishing has greatly fallen off, from the erection of grist & saw mills on the streams. The fisheries emp'd, in 1851, 812 vessels, with an agg. of 43,333 tons, manned by 3,681 men, & 5,161 boats, manned by 6,713 men; the catch amounted to 1,669 barrels of salmon, 3,536 of shad, 100,047 of mackerel, 53,200 of herrings, & 543 barrels of alewives; total value of fisheries, £217,220; & there were manuf'd 159,250 barrels of fish-oil, valued at £17,754. Sevl. attempts have been made to prosecute the whale and seal fisheries, but hitherto with no great success. The manufactures of Nova Scotia are yet but very limited. Coarse cloths, called "homespuns," are made & are generally worn by the farmers, fishermen, &c. There were in this province in 1851, 81 woollen factories, employing 119 persons, & 11,096 hand looms, producing 119,698 yds. of fulled cloth, 790,104 yds. not fulled, & 219,352 yds. flannel; total value, £36,178; 9 iron foundries, employing 138 persons, making castings, &c., to the amount of £8,121;—398 grist m., 1,153 saw m., 237 tanneries, & 10 factories moved by steam power. Cash value of agricultural implements manuf'd, £16,640.

The houses of Nova Scotia are mostly constructed of timber, excepting in Halifax & the larger towns, where some good stone & brick houses are to be seen; yet stone for building abounds in the province—granite of the finest quality on the S. coast, freestone all along the N. shore, & excellent slate in the central region.

The foreign trade of Nova Scotia was very limited previous to 1824; since that period it has extended to the Baltic, Mediterranean, China, Mauritius, E. Indies, the Brazils, & the Havana. The total amount of imports at Halifax & the outports in 1852, was $5,309,894, of which $1,445,043 were from the United States. The exports during the same period, amounted to $3,925,227, of which $941,607 were to the U. S. Of these the principal articles were,—mackerel, valued at $280,145; salmon, $30,030; other fish, dry & pickled, $218,693; skins and furs, $8,165; molasses, $3,625; potatoes, $4,152; sugar, $3,000; cordwood, $33,990; coals, Picton, $151,215; coals, Sidney, $35,983; gypsum, $32,823; freestone & grindstones, $4,500; oil, fish, $43,915. The number of vessels that entered and cleared during the year, were,—72 to Great Britain; 1,757 to British colonies; 11,429 to the United States; other countries, 158. Total tonnage, 383,400 tons.

The population of Nova Scotia is now chiefly composed of the descendants of the English, Irish, & the Scotch. The western & midland counties are principally occupied by the descendants of the loyalists, mostly of English extraction. The county of Lunenburgh is inhabited by a race sprung from a body of German & Swiss protestants who emigrated from Rotterdam in 1753. There are also several settlements of French Acadians. The Indians are still a distinct people, but there are only a few hundreds of them left in the province.

The religious denominations in 1851 were as follows,—Church of England, 36,452; Baptists, 42,243; Congregationalists, 2,639; Lutherans, 4,087; Methodists, 23,596; Presbyterians, 72,914; Quakers, 188; Roman Catholics, 69,634; Sandemanians, 101; Universalists, 580; & 3,791 of other sects; the whole had in 1851, 567 edifices for worship.

Educational Establishments, &c.—King's College at Windsor, Dalhousie College at Halifax, St. Marys College at Halifax, Acadia College at Wolfville; Free Church College at Halifax, Gorham College at Liverpool, & the Theological Seminary of Acadia College, & Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church of Nova Scotia,—18 academies, & there were in 1851, 1,096 schools, having an attendance of 31,354 scholars.

The public affairs of the colony are administered by a governor (styled lieutenant-governor), an executive council of 11 members, a legislative council of 21 members, and a house of assembly of 53 members, elected quadrennially, & which has entire control over the provincial revenue (salary of lieutenant-governor, £3,000). The laws are dispensed by a court of King's Bench & District Courts, as in Canada. The laws in force are the common & the statute law of England, & the statute law of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia was first visited by the Cabots in 1497, but was not colonized by Europeans till 1604, when De Monts, a Frenchman, and his followers, and some Jesuits, attempted for eight years to form settlements in Port Royal, St. Croix, &c., but were finally expelled from the country by the English governor & colonists of Virginia, who claimed the country by right of the discovery of Sebastian Cabot. In 1621, Sir William Alexander applied for, & obtained from James I., a grant of the whole country, which he proposed to colonize on an extensive scale, & in 1623 the attempt was made; but the proposed colonists, finding the various points where they wished to establish themselves, thronged by foreign adventurers, did not think it prudent to attempt a settlement, & therefore returned to England. During the reign of Charles I., the Nova Scotia baronets were created, & their patents ratified in parliament; they were to contribute their aid to the settlement, & to have portions of land allotted to them; their number was not to exceed 150. In 1654, Cromwell sent out an armed force, & took possession of the country, which remained with the English till 1667, when it was ceded to France by the treaty of Breda. But the English from time to time attacked the French colonists at various points, and ravaged their settlements, continuing to harass and annoy them till 1713, when the country was finally ceded to England.

NUBIA, a country of E. Africa, on the Red Sea, situated between lat. 11° & 24° N., & lon. 28° & 39° E.; bounded E. by the Red Sea, S. by Abyssinia, W. Darfur & the Great Desert, & N. by Egypt. Area estimated at 35,000 (?) sq. m., & pop. at 400,000 (?). It is divided into Lower Nubia, extending from the frontier of Egypt to Dongola (lat. 18° N.); and Upper Nubia from Dongola to Abyssinia. Nubia is situated almost entirely in the valley of the Nile, which is here so narrow as to leave no space for cultivation on its banks, & the productive districts occur in the gorges between the mountains, & on the islands. A desert of sand & rocks, with some small fertile oases, extends E. from Lower Nubia to the Red Sea. In Upper Nubia the country is more varied, the Nile here receives its affl. the Atbara, or Tacazze, 165 m. below the junction of the White & Blue rivers; between these rivers are situated the regions of Shendy, Halfay, & Sennaar, which contain vast fertile plains. The climate of Nubia is extremely hot & dry, but on the whole healthy; the plague is said never to have penetrated S. of the 2d cataract (lat. 22° N.) Besides the animals common to Egypt, Nubia has the giraffe, & several species of antelopes & birds which belong to the central plateau of Africa. Agriculture employs most of the pop. on the banks of the Nile & its tributaries, & artificial irrigation is resorted to as in Egypt. Chief products dhourra, barley, cotton, indigo, tobacco, senna, coffee & dates. Cattle, sheep, & goats are reared by the Arabs of the neighboring deserts. Manufs. are limited to objects for domestic use. An extensive transit trade is carried on with the interior of Africa & Egypt, in slaves, gold-dust, senna, & ostrich feathers. Suakin on the Red Sea is the only port. The Nubians belong to Arabian & Ethiopian races; the pastoral tribes on the banks of the Tacazze & the Upper Nile speak the Arabic language. Previous to the conquest of Nubia by Ibrahim Pasha in 1821, it was governed by a multitude of independent chiefs; since then it has been under the dominion of Egypt.

OHIO, a large river of the United States. This r., if we take into view its length, the richness & populousness, present & prospective, of the vast country which it drains, & the extent of its navigation, is second only to the Mississippi. It is formed by the confluence of the Alleghany from the N. and the Monongahela from the S. at Pittsburg, in the W. part of Pennsylvania, lat. 40° 32′ N. & lon. 80° 2′ W., at the height of 1,138 feet above tide water in the Atlantic. It proceeds in a direction W.S.W., dividing the states of Virginia and Kentucky on the S. from Ohio, Indiana, & Illinois on the N., & enters the Mississippi in lat. 37° N. & lon. 88° 58′ W. Its length from Pittsburg to its mouth by the course of the river, is 948 miles; but the distance in a direct course, is only 614 miles. It has a descent, in its whole course, of 395 feet, making an average descent of not quite 5 inches in a mile. The width of the Ohio varies from 400 to 1,400 yards; its average width is 534 yards, opposite to Cincinnati, which is about equidistant from Pittsburg, to its confluence with the Mississippi where it is about 900 yards wide. The great valley drained by this river contains over 218,000 sq. ms., & a population of over 5,000,000, which is rapidly increasing. There are no considerable falls in this river excepting at Louisville, Ky., where it descends 22½ feet in 2 miles. These falls have been obviated by a canal around them, which admits of the passage of the largest steamboats; but boats ascend & descend these rapids, when the water is high. The current of the Ohio when low does not exceed 2 miles an hour, when at a mean height three miles, & when higher & rising four or five miles. The highest water occurs in December, March, May, & June; and the lowest in August, September, & October. The average difference between high & low water is 40 feet; its extreme range on record 64 feet (at Cincinnati). During 8 or 10 weeks in the winter, the navigation is obstructed by floating ice. Of the two confluents which form the Ohio, the Alleghany is the most important, being navigable for boats 260 miles to Olean, N. Y., & will hereafter, by means of the Genesee Valley canal, terminating at this place, & extending to the Erie canal, form an important communication between the city of New York, & the West. The principal tributaries of the Ohio on the N. are the Beaver, Muskingum, Scioto, the two Miamis, Whitewater, & Wabash; those on the S. are the Kanawha, Sandy, Licking, Kentucky, Green, Cumberland, & Tennessee. Some of these are navigable at high water to a great extent, by boats and steamboats. The Tennessee is navigable by boats for 1,000 miles; the Cumberland is navigable for steamboats to Nashville, & for keel-boats 300 miles further; the Wabash is navigable for 200 miles; Green river, 200 miles; Kentucky, 150; Great Kanawha, 64 miles, to the salt works. The Ohio, with its tributaries, has 5,000 miles of navigable waters.

OHIO, one of the United States, lies betw. lat. 38° 30′ & 42° N., & between lon. 80° 35′ & 84° 47′ W. It is 210 m. long from north to south, & 200 m. broad. Area, 39,964 sq. m. Pop. in 1790 was 3,000; in 1800, 45,365; in 1810, 230,760; in 1820, 581,434; in 1830, 937,637; in 1840, 1,519,467; & in 1850, 1,980,408. It is divided into 87 counties. The following table gives Physical Features, &c. The land in the interior of the state, & bordering on Lake Erie, is generally level, & in some places marshy. From one-quarter to one-third of the state, comprehending the eastern & south-eastern parts, bordering on the Ohio river, is generally hilly & broken, but in no part mountainous. On the margin of the Ohio river, & several of its tributaries, are alluvial lands of great fertility. The valleys of the Scioto & the Great & Little Miami are the most extensive sections of level, rich, & fertile lands in the state. At the head of the Muskingum river are prairies of considerable extent, some of which are wet, though generally dry & fertile. The height of land which divides the waters which fall into the Ohio from those which fall into Lake Erie is the most marshy of any in the state, while the land on the margin of the rivers is generally dry. Wheat may be regarded as the staple production of the state, though Indian corn & other grains are largely cultivated. It is rich in mineral wealth, iron, coal, limestone, marble, & superior building stone, grind-stones, &c. There are many valuable salt springs.

There were in this state in 1850, 9,851,493 acres of land improved, & 8,146,000 of unimproved land in farms; cash value of farms, $358,758,603; & the value of implements & machinery, $12,750,585. Live stock, —horses, 463,397; asses & mules, 3,423; milch cows, 544,499; working oxen, 65,381; other cattle, 749,067; sheep, 3,942,929; swine, 1,964,770. Value of live stock, $44,121,741.

Agricultural Products, &c.—Wheat, 14,487,351 bush.; rye, 425,918; Ind. corn, 59,078,695; oats, 13,472,742; barley, 354,358; buckwheat, 638,060; peas & beans, 60,168; potatoes, 5,057,769; sweet potatoes, 187,991. Value of products of the orchard, $695,921; of market gardens, $214,004. Pounds of butter made, 34,449,879; of cheese, 20,819,542; maple sugar, 4,588,209; molasses, 197,308 gallons; bees-wax and honey, 804,275 pounds; wool produced, 10,196,371; flax, 449,932; silk cocoons, 1,552; hops, 63,731; tobacco, 10,454,449; hay, tons of, 1,433,142; hemp, 150; clover seeds, 103,197 bushels; other grass seeds, 37,310; flax seed, 188,880; & were made, 48,207 gallons of wine. Value of home-made manufactures, $1,712,196; of slaughtered animals, $7,439,243.

Rivers, &c.—The Ohio river, which gives name to the state, washes its entire southern border. This river is 1,004 ms. long from Pittsburg to its mouth, by its various windings, though it is only 614 in a direct line. Its current is gentle, with no falls, excepting at Louisville, Kentucky, where there is a descent of 22½ feet in 2 miles, which is obviated by a canal. For about half the year it is navigable for steamboats of a large class through its whole course. The Muskingum, the largest river which flows entirely in this state, is formed by the junction of the Tuscarawas and Walhonding rivers, & enters the Ohio at Marietta. It is navigable for boats 100 miles. The Scioto, the second river in magnitude, flowing entirely within the state, is about 200 miles long, & enters the Ohio at Portsmouth. Its largest branch is the Whetstone, or Olentangy, which joins it immediately above Columbus. It is navigable for boats 130 miles. The Great Miami, a rapid river in the western part of the state, is 100 miles long, & enters the Ohio in the S.W. corner of the state. The Little Miami has a course of 70 miles, & enters the Ohio 7 miles above Cincinnati. Totals	2,133	12,038	54	12,092	1,102	44

Physical Features, &c.—Much of this territory is mountainous, but it abounds in fertile valleys. It forms 3 sections, separated from each other by nearly parallel ridges, & following the general direction of the coast line. These several sections have each distinct characteristics of soil, productions, & climate. The division extending from the Pacific coast to the Cascade range, has a genial climate throughout the year. The valley of the Willamette is exceedingly fertile, the intervales & prairies form the best of farming lands, and the uplands afford good pasturage, & abound with valuable timber; & there is much fertile land bordering the Shasti & Umpqua rivers. The division between the Cascade range & the Blue mntns. has generally a light sandy soil, but with many valleys of rich alluvion; altogether said to be a fine grazing region. The portion lying west of the Rocky Mountains & E. of the Blue mntns., in extent full one half of the territory, is mostly a rocky & rough country, with some few narrow valleys of great fertility. In the southern portion of the territory gold has been extensively found.

Value of slaughtered animals $164,530.

The educational establishments returned by the census in 1850, comprised 29 academies with 842 pupils, & 3 schools having 80 scholars. There were in the territory in 1850, 1 Baptist church, 1 Congregational, 1 Methodist, 1 Presbyterian, 5 Roman Catholic, the whole having 9 churches. Total value of church property, $76,520.

The Columbia forms its north boundary for a distance of 300 miles, & the E. part is almost entirely drained by the South branch, called Saptin or Lewis r. & its tributaries; a very small portion only in S.E. corner is drained by the head sources of the Rio Colorado, here called Green r.; & also by the Bear river of Great Salt Lake; Umatillah, John Days, & Willamette rivers enter the Columbia r. on the S.; & the Shastl or Rogue, Umpqua, Sequatchie, Yaquina, Kilamook, & several small streams enter the Pacific on the W.

The principal places are Salem, the capital, Portland, at the head of navigation, Oregon City, and Astoria. The principal articles of export are lumber & agricultural produce. Tonnage, 1853, 1,063 tons. There were in the ter. 1850, 37 saw m. employed in the manufacture of lumber. The fisheries of Oregon are important & valuable. The rivers abound with salmon, especially the Columbia & the Willamette, which are taken in large quantities below the fall. The hunting & trapping of the fur bearing animals has given employment to a great number of persons, & the rivers & coasts abound with wild fowls.

The governor is appointed by the President of the United States for four years. The Legislative Assembly is composed of a council of 9 members, elected for three years, & a house of representatives of 18 members elected annually. The elective franchise is enjoyed by every free white male inhabitant twenty-one years of age, & a citizen of the United States.

On the 7th of May, 1792, Captain Robert Gray, in the ship Columbia, of Boston, discovered & entered the Columbia river; to which he gave the name of his vessel. He was the first person that established the fact of the existence of this great river, & this gives to the United States the right of discovery. In 1804-5, Captains Lewis & Clark, under the direction of the government of the United States, explored the country from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Columbia; and spent the winter of 1805-6 at the mouth of the Columbia. This exploration of the River Columbia, the first ever made, constitutes another ground of the claim of the United States to the country. In 1808, the Missouri Fur Company, at St. Louis, established a trading post beyond the Rocky Mountains, on the head-waters of Lewis river, the first ever formed on any of the waters of the Columbia. In 1810, the Pacific Fur Company, under John Jacob Astor, of New York, was formed; & in 1811, they founded Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia, as the principal trading post, & proceeded to establish others in the interior. A little later in the same year, the North West Company sent a detachment to form establishments on the Columbia; but when they arrived at the mouth of the river, they found the post occupied. In consequence of the exposure of Astoria by the war of 1813, the post was sold out to the North West Company. At the close of the war, Astoria was restored, by order of the British government, to its original founders, agreeably to the first article of the Treaty of Ghent; but Britain still persisted in claiming this territory, S. to the 42d degree of lat., until 1845. In 1821, the Hudson Bay & North West Company, who had previously been rivals, were united, & since that time have greatly extended their establishments in the region of Oregon. It is very ancient, & has many fine squares, but is in general ill built. Chief edifices, the cathedral, or church of St. Croix, one of the finest in France; & the town hall, an edifice of the 15th century. It has an university academy for the deps. Loiret, Loire-et-Cher, & Indre-et-Loire, a national college, a primary normal school, a secondary medical school, a public library of 25,000 vols., museums of natural history, a botanic garden, & a theatre. Its industrial establishments comprise manufs. of hosiery, woollens, cottons, pottery-ware, vinegar, & saltpetre, sugar refineries, breweries, and metal foundries, & it has an extensive commerce in the wine, brandy, & vinegar of its district. Orleans was built on the ruins of the ancient Genabum. Taken & destroyed by Cæsar, it took the name of Aurelianum in honor of the emperor Aurelian, by whom it was embellished. It was cap. of the first kingdom of Burgundy, & since the time of Philip le Valois, it gave the title of Duke to a member of the royal family. In 1428, Orleans was besieged for 6 months by the English, & delivered by the heroism of Joan of Arc, who hence was called "the Maid of Orleans." In 1567 it was taken & pillaged by the Calvinists. Eleven councils have been held here. It is the birth-place of Robert, king of France, of Pothier, & of the Physician Petit.—The forest of Orleans, extending N. & N.E. of the town, is one of the largest in France.—The canal of Orleans connects the Loire by means of the canal of Loing, with the Seine. The valley of Orleans was devasted by an inundation of the Loire in 1846.—Orleannais, an old prov. of France, had for cap. Orleans; it now forms the greater parts of the deps. Loiret, Eure-et-Loir, & Loir-et-Cher.

OSWEGO, city, port of entry, & semi-capital of Oswego co., N. Y. It lies on both sides of Oswego r., at its entrance into Lake Ontario, & at the N. termination of the Syracuse & Oswego r. r., & of the Oswego canal, in the towns of Oswego & Scriba, 160 W.N.W. Albany, 373 W. It is regularly & handsomely laid out with streets 100 feet wide, crossing each other at right angles. The portions on each side of the river are connected by a bridge, 700 ft. long, which cost $6,000. It has a court house, a custom house, city hall, market house, 3 banks with an aggregate capital of $359,481, an insurance company, an incorporated academy, & a flourishing female seminary; 12 churches,—2 Baptist, 2 Episcopal, 1 Evangelical, 2 Methodist, 2 Presbyterian, 2 Roman Catholic, & 1 Universalist. The harbor, one of the best on the lakes, is formed by a pier, or mole, built by the U. S. government. This pier is 1,215 feet in length, with an entrance 250 feet wide. On the end of the W. pier is a light-house, & there is another on the hill, on the E. side of the r., near the fort. The water within the pier has a depth of from 10 to 20 feet, & the harbor is spacious & safe. There are owned at this place several steamboats & 70 schooners, with an aggregate tonnage of 20,000 tons; canal boats, 17,600 tons. The canal boats are generally built in a very substantial manner, with decks, capable of being towed through the lake. A considerable portion of the trade between New York & the west passes through Oswego & the Welland canal, in Canada, around the Falls of Niagara. The salt from Salina, destined to the west, mostly passes this way. The tonnage of Oswego in 1853 was 32,213 tons. Oswego possesses great manufacturing facilities. A feeder dam, 7¼ feet high, three-fourths of a mile above the village, furnishes an abundance of surplus water, which is taken from the canal, with a fall of 19 feet, on the E. side of the r. A canal has also been constructed on the W. side, 62 feet wide & 7 feet deep, at a cost of $75,000, which has a fall at the village of 19 feet. Various manufacturing estabs. now exist, & many more might be accommodated. The city contains 95 mercantile stores, a cotton fac., a woollen fac., 16 flouring m., with 83 run of stones, & capable of making 7,575 barrels of flour per day, 2 grist m., 4 grain elevators, 2 iron foundries, 2 machine shops, a last fac., a starch fac., & 4 printing offices issuing 2 daily & 3 weekly newspapers. OXFORD, a city, parl. bor., & the seat of one of the principal univer. of England, cap. co. Oxford, between the junction of the Isis & Cherwell, here crossed by numerous bridges, 55 m. W.N.W. London, on the Great Western R. R. & branch. Lat. 51° 45′ 55″ N., lon. 1° 15′ 29″ W. Area of parl. bor. 2,930 ac. Pop. 1851, 27,843. It stands in an undulating amphitheatre, surrounded by wooded meadows, and encompassed on the W., S. & E. by hills, but opens towards the N. into a campaign country, and presents a magnificent appearance, with its numerous spires and domes, that of the Radcliffe library being the most conspicuous. The High street, proceeding from E. to W., & entered by a handsome stone bridge over the Cherwell, is one of the noblest thoroughfares in Europe. In it are Magdalen, All Souls, Queens, & University colleges, and the university church. At right angles with this street is another line upwards of 1 m. in length. In this are Christ-church college and the townhall, & its N. part is very broad, and ornamented with rows of elms. Parallel to High street, is Broad street, in which are Baliol, Trinity, & Exeter colleges, the Ashmolean museum, Clarendon rooms, Seldonian theatre, & near it the Academical schools, with the Bodleian library & Picture gallery. Several of the streets are lined with substantial private residences, & a new and handsome suburb has been built within the last 25 years. The cathedral of Oxford, attached to Christ-church college, and on the site of a priory founded in the 8th century, is an edifice of different styles, between the 12th and 16th centuries, with a spire 146 ft. in height. Its see comprises the co. Oxford & the archdeaconries of Berks & Bucks. St. Mary's church, used for academical services, has a spire of 180 ft. in height, and is a fine structure, though disfigured by a heavy porch. Carfax, or St. Martin's, is the corporation church. St. Peter's in the E. is the oldest existing church in Oxford (supposed about the 9th century); its older parts are Saxon, and it has a crypt of the same architecture. St. Mary Magdalen is a handsome church in the decorated style. St. John's, All Saints' & St. Giles also deserve notice. In the city are also 10 other benefices. Besides the colleges, several of which, as Christ-church, New College, All Souls, Magdalen, and Queen's, boast of imposing architecture & rich internal ornament: other principal buildings are the town and co. halls, music hall, city bridewell, sessions house, and co. jail, a Gothic embattled structure on the site of the ancient castle, the market houses, Radcliffe infirmary, house of industry for 11 pas., many almshouses, and in 1851, 32 churches,—4 Baptists, 19 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 2 Independent, 1 Jews' Synagogue, 4 Methodist, 1 New Church, & one Roman Catholic. Oxford has large diocesan and national schools, numerous charitable endowments, several banks, and it had formerly many flourishing hotels, & was a centre of a good deal of stage coach traffic. It is chiefly supported by its university, but it has some transit trade in coals and corn, facilitated by wharfs and quays on the Isis. It is governed, exclusive of the university, by a mayor, 9 Aldermen & 30 councillors, and is the seat of quarter & petty sessions, a mayor's court, and court of hustings, and of assizes, & monthly courts for the co. It sends 2 members to H. of C. for the town, & 2 members for the university. It is the place of election for members for the co. Mkts., Wednesday & Saturday. Fairs, 4 times ann., & races are held during August in Port Meadow, W. of the city.—The UNIVERSITY of OXFORD consists of 19 colleges and 5 halls, as follows:—University college, reputed to have been founded in 872, revived in 1249: Baliol, founded between 1263 and 1268, and of which Wickliffe was once master; Merton, founded at Malden in Surrey, in 1264, and removed to Oxford in 1274; Exeter, founded 1314; Oriel, a handsome and richly-ornamented edifice, dating from 1326; Queen's, founded 1340, and the buildings of which are among the finest in the city; New College, 1386, with the most gorgeous and elegant chapel in the university; Lincoln, founded 1427; All Souls, 1437, with a noble hall, and a library of 40,000 vols.; Magdalen, 1456, at the entrance of the city from London, with much fine Gothic architecture, and a hall that has been the banqueting-room of many English sovereigns; Brazen Nose, founded 1509; Corpus Christi, 1516; Christ-church, originally founded by Cardinal Wolsey in 1525, and with by far the most extensive buildings and grounds belonging to any of the colleges, a W. front, 382 ft. in length, a tower, containing the "Great Tom," a bell, weighing 17,000 lbs.; magnificent hall, picture gallery, library, &c.; Trinity, founded 1554; St. John's, 1557, with handsome buildings in the N. part of the city; Jesus, founded 1571; Wadham, 1613; Pembroke, 1620; Worcester college, 1714; and St. Mary's, New Inn, St. Alban, Magdalen, and St. Edmund's halls, which two last are unendowed academical houses. Total Mems. (1848) 6,020. The university is governed by its own statutes, administered by a chancellor, a resident vice-chancellor, who is a magistrate for Oxford, and the cos. of Oxford & Berks, two proctors, and some subordinate officers. The corporate business is conducted by the house of congregation, composed of the resident doctors, heads, and professors of colleges, and the house of convocation, comprising all those whose names remain on the books of the university, whether resident or not. Public professorships are of royal or private endowment; and in all there are 28 professors and readers, some of whom lecture in the "schools," new buildings for which have been lately constructed. The fellowships and scholarships are chiefly reserved for parties who, by birth or interest, rather than learning, acquire a title to them; but at Baliol, Oriel, Lincoln, and Wadham colleges, they have been thrown open to competition. Most of the colleges have exhibitions, with stipends from public bodies elsewhere, and at Christ church is a body of servitors similar to the sizars of Cambridge. The Bodleian library, connected with the university, comprises 220,000 vols., & 20,000 MSS., and is entitled to a copy of all new works published in the United Kingdom. There are besides about 23 other libraries. Total revs. of the university estimated at £257,420. University college claims to have been founded by Alfred. It is certain that Oxford was a seat of learning as early as the time of Edward the Confessor. It was a principal residence of numerous Saxon, Danish, and Norman monarchs. In the civil war the members of its university sided with the king, and they have generally, to the present day, espoused high church and tory principles. The university has sent 2 mem. to House of Commons since the time of Edward I.

PACIFIC CITY, p. v., capital Pacific co., Washington Ter., on the right bank of the Columbia river, near its entrance into the Pacific Ocean.

PACIFIC OCEAN, a vast watery expanse extending from the Arctic to the Antarctic circle, through 127° of lat., & between America on the E., & Asia, the Malay Archipelago, and Australia on the W. In its widest part, at the equator, it is 10,000 m. across; it narrows especially toward the N., where it communicates with the Arctic Ocean by Behring Strait; & including the Indian Ocean, it contains upwards of 70 millions of sq. m., or more than all the dry land on the globe. Its coast line on the American side, though generally bold, is very little broken by inlets; on the Asiatic side it is very irregular; & the Celebes, China, & Yellow seas, with the seas of Japan, Okhotsk, & Kamtschatka are inlets of this Ocean. It is studded with a great number of island groups, the principal of which, proceeding from W. to E., are the Ladrones, Carolines, Solomon, Queen Charlotte's, New Hebrides, Feejee, Friendly, Society, Low, Marquesas, Sandwich, and Galapagos Islands, & New Zealand, besides a vast multitude of solitary islands, reefs, & sandbanks. The great equatorial current of this ocean originates in the Antarctic drift current, which flows N. along the shores of S. America, & then W. through the Pacific, where it occupies the entire space between the tropics. Strong land currents sweep round the shores of E. Australia & Japan. The N.E. trade-wind prevails uninterruptedly between lat. 5° & 23° N.; the S.E. trade-wind commonly blows from the equator to lat. 26° S., betw. them is the region of calms, extending over 5°, and varying in position according to the season. Greatest equatorial temp. of Pacific 88°.5 Fahr. In lat. 56° 26′ the temp. of the sea throughout its depth is 39°.5 Fahr. This ocean became first known to Europeans in 1513; it received its name from Magalhaens, who sailed across it in 1521. In the 18th century its different parts were explored by Behring, Anson, Byron, Bougainville, Cook, Vancouver, Broughton, La Perouse, &c. In the present century by D'Entrecasteaux, Krusenstern, Beechey, Fitzroy, D'Urville, Wilkes, and Sir James Ross. [For navigation routes, see Maury's Wind and Current Charts.] Its most important traffic, in which the American mercantile marine stands preëminent, is the whaling business. The Polynesian, printed in the Sandwich Islands, gives the following report of the whaling business of 1852:—

The number of whale ships that have visited the islands is 275, & the total amount of oil & bone in the same is 17,247 barrels sperm oil, 421,585 barrels whale oil, & 5,357,737 lbs. of bone. The average catchings during the season have been 1,244 barrels whale oil, & 15,815 lbs. bone to each ship. The amount of oil which had been sent home between the 6th November and December 1st, was 148,523 barrels sperm, 3,048,817 barrels whale, & 2,602,918 lbs. bone, all of which was shipped on 15 vessels, 7 of which cleared for New Bedford, two for New York, three for New London, one for Warren, one for Stonington, & one for Falmouth. Estimating the value of the 275 ships which have touched at the Islands this season, together with their outfits at $40,000 each, we find the total value of the fleet to be $11,000,000; 543,280 gallons of sperm oil, at 80 cents per gallon, is $434,624; 13,279,597 gallons of whale oil at 50 cents per gallon is $6,639,944 50; 5,357,737 lbs. bone at 25 cents per lb. is $1,339,444 25. Total value of vessels and cargo, $19,414,016 84. The number of seamen aboard these 275 ships is probably six or eight thousand. The national character of these ships is as follows: American, 258; French, 10; Bremen, 4; English, Chilean, & Hawaiian, each one. The above facts show the value & business only of that portion of the Pacific whaling fleet which has visited the Sandwich Isls. during the last few months. There are over 15,000 American seamen, & 650 ships, at present engaged in the Pacific fisheries, from which it will be seen that our countrymen have almost a monopoly of the trade. Not more than about one half of the whale oil produced by them finds a market in the United States. Nearly all the other half is exported to the Baltic & North Seas, & is principally consumed in the States of Germany.

PALESTINE, or the HOLY LAND (Philistia, Judæa, a country of S.W., Asia, comprising the S. part of Syria, & forming the modern pashs. Acre & Gaza, & the S. part of the pash. Damascus, extending between lat. 30° 40′ & 33° 32′ N., & lon. 33° 35′ & 35° 48′ E., having N. the pash. Tripoli, W. the Mediterranean, & S. & S.E. the Arabian desert. Length from Mount Hermon in the N. to Kadesh-Barnea in the S., 190 miles; average breadth 75 miles. Area, 11,000 sq. miles, or about double that of Wales. It is traversed from N. to S. by the chain of Lebanon and Anti-Libanus. Mount Hermon, the highest summit, has an elevation of 10,000 feet, Jebel Mousa or Sinai is 7,893 feet, the Mount of Olives near the site of Jerusalem, has an elevation of 2,536 feet, while the lake of Tiberias has a depression of 328 feet below the level of the sea, & the valley of the Dead Sea the remarkable depression of 1,312 feet (Symonds). The country generally is of trap formation with volcanic rocks in several localities, as in the valley of the Dead Sea. An oolitic limestone & indurated chalk rock prevails, in which are numerous caverns W. of the Jordan, and is common in the locality of Jerusalem. Soil rich and fertile in the valleys & sides of the mountains; but as the climate requires irrigation, & careful culture is wanting, the land is comparatively desolate & barren. Principal river the Jordan, which traverses the land from N. to S.; its tributary the Jarmuth; the Kishon which flows into the Mediterranean: the Belus or Nahr Khardanus, & a few smaller streams. Lakes Meron or Huleh, Gennesareth (Tiberias), & the Dead Sea are mentioned under separate heads. Climate in the dry season very fine, with bright sky & no rain. Gentle rains, with W. winds, commence in October, & fall regularly in November & December. Rain continues at intervals more or less till March, after which none falls all the harvest, which is in May and June, or the summer which succeeds afterwards. Winter frosts slight, except in high positions, where snow occasionally falls; heat of summer in the low valleys is very great, but not oppressive in other situations. [See temp. of JERUSALEM.] In the fifth century, the country was divided ecclesiastically into the first, second, & third Palestine; 1st, comprising Judea, cap. Cæsarea or Kisariah; 2d, Samaria, cap. Scythopolis or Bethshean, Galilee, &c.; & the third the countries E. & S. the Dead Sea, cap. Petra, over all which sees, Jerusalem was subsequently erected into a patriarchate. The ancient divisions among the tribes of Israel, & Pashaliks, are as follows:

	Tribes	Ant. Divisions.	Modern Pash. &c.
West of the Jordan.	Asher, Naphthali, Zebulon	Galilee	Akka
	Issachar, Manasseh, Ephraim	Samaria	Akka and Damascus
	Benjamin, Judah, Dan, Simeon	Judea	Gaza and Damascus.
E. of Do.	Manasseh	Gaulonitis, Batanea, Galaaditis, Perea	Damascus

PARÁ ("father of waters"), the name originally applied to the river Amazon, S. America, but now employed to designate its S. arm, which receives the Tocantins river, is 40 m. across at its entrance, and has on its E. side the city Pará. It is in this mouth of the Amazon that the bore is chiefly manifested, the tide rising to high water in a few minutes before the new and full moons, by a vast wave, 15 feet in height, followed sometimes by three others, which enter the estuary with irresistible violence.

PARÁ, a vast marit. prov. of Brazil, in the N., nominally comprising nearly all the Brazilian territory watered by the Amazon, Rio Negro, and their tributaries, and extending N. from lat. 9° S., & W. from lon. 45° W. Estim. area, 1,102,500 sq. m., & pop. 205,000, of whom 10,000 are supposed to be Indians. Most part of this region remains unexplored, and covered with dense primeval forests. Valuable products are in immense variety; at present, the chief articles of commerce are rice, manioc, millet, cotton, sugar, caoutchouc, cocoa, sarsaparilla, cloves, balsams, gums, medicinal plants, & Brazil nuts. The principal manufs. are of shoes, and other articles made from Indian rubber. Pará, or Belem, is the only city of importance in all this region; in the interior are some scattered vills., mostly on tributaries of the Amazon, not along the main stream, the traveller on which will scarcely see 50 houses in 300 miles.

PARÁ, or BELEM, a seaport city of Brazil, cap. prov., 70 m. from the Atlantic, lat. of fort St. Pedro 1° 28′ S., lon. 48° 30′ 5″ W. Pop. estim. at 10,000, mostly of European descent. It stands on elevated ground, on S. shore of the bay of Guajuara, on rt. b. of the Pará, or Tocantins, and has a fine appearance from the river. Chief edifices, the governor's palace, cathedral, several other churches, convents, barracks, arsenal, episcopal palace and seminary, formerly a Jesuits' college; a prison, and an unfinished theatre. Vessels of large draft can lie near the city, and the cocoa, caoutchouc, isinglass, rice, & drugs, exported from Brazil are chiefly from Pará. It has also a trade in cotton, vanilla, annatto, dye woods, honey, wax, and a great variety of other vegetable and animal products. The trade is mostly with Liverpool, London, Barbadoes, Cayenne, and the N. American, and other Brazilian ports.—The river Pará, bounding the isl. Marajo S.ward, extends between lon. 48° 10′ & 50° 40′ W., receives the Tocantins and Annapu from the S., and is connected N.W.-ward with the Amazon.

PARADOX LAKE, N. Y., lies in Schroon t., Essex co., 4 miles long, & from half a mile to 1 mile wide. There are many small lakes in the vicinity.

PARAGUAÇU, a river of Brazil, prov. Bahia, after a tortuous E. course of 260 m., enters the bay of Todos-os-Santos, 35 m. W.N.W. San Salvador. Chief affluent, the Jacuhype.

PARAGUANA, a peninsula of Venezuela, S. A., dep. Zulia, prov. and 22 m. N. W. Coro, extending into the Caribbean sea, in lat. 12° N., long. 70° W. Length and breadth about 40 m. each. Surface mutinous, in the centre, whence it slopes gradually to the coasts. It has no town of importance.—The Paraguaa river, dep. Orinoco, tributary to the Caroni, has a N. course of 220 m. On it is the town Barcelonetta.

PARAGUAY, a large river of S America, and one of the principal uniting to form the Plata: rises by numerous heads in the Brazilian prov. Matto-Grosso, near the sources of the Guapore, Tapajos, & Xingu, tributs. of the Amazon, & in lat. 14° S., lon. betw. 55° & 58° W. It thence flows mostly S., between the territories of Bolivia and the Argentine repub. on the W., and those of Brazil & Paraguay E.ward; and near Corrientes, lat. 27° 20′ S., it unites with the Parana, the name of which river it afterwards assumes. Total course 1,600 m., throughout nearly all which, from the sea upwards to the influx of the Jauru, it is navigable. It receives from the E. the rivers Porrudas & Taguari, from the W. the Sipotuba, Jauru, Galdan, Pilcomayo, & Vermejo; and betw. lat. 17° & 19° S., it traverses a wide region of swamps, which during the rains form a great inland sea.

PARAGUAY, a republic or consulship of South America, extends from lat. 21° to 27° 20′ S., and lon. 54° to 58° 40′ W. The space thus enclosed forms a very compact territory, nearly in the shape of a parallelogram, about 430 m. long, N. to S., with an average breadth of about 200 m., & contains an area of about 86,000 sq. m. Pop. 300,000. Capital, Asuncion. The name Paraguay at one time was used in a very extensive sense, so as to include the whole of the immense regions of S. America, between lat. 16° S., and the Strait of Magellan, & between Chili & Peru on the W., & Brazil on the E., now confined to the republic properly so called. On the N. the limits of this state with Brazil are not definitely settled, but in other directions it has the advantage of great natural boundaries; the Parana on the E. & S., & its tributary the Paraguay on the W. The whole surface thus belongs to the basins of these two rivers, a mountain range of considerable elevation, stretching between them N. to S., so as to form their water-shed, & send the drainage in opposite directions, but nearly in equal portions. The distance of the water-shed from the river scarcely anywhere exceeds 100 m., & hence the tributaries by which the drainage is conveyed are more remarkable for their number than their magnitude. By far the largest is the Tibiquari, which, owing to an E. bend in the water-shed, has its course considerably prolonged, & being augmented by several large affluents from the N., becomes a noble stream before it reaches the Paraguay. The surface is mountainous in the centre, and also in the N.E., where a ramification, known by the name of the Sierra-de-Maracay, or Cordillera-de-Maracura, breaks off from the central chain, & proceeding E. to the banks of the Parana, interrupts the navigation of that river, & forms one of the most remarkable cataracts in the world. The river, which above the rapids is 12,500 feet wide, begins to force its way through a deep, narrow gorge, & becoming suddenly contracted to 150 ft., pours down its immense flood with tremendous fury, & a noise which is heard at the distance of 18 m. From the mountain region the surface rapidly descends, first presenting a finely diversified succession of lower heights, & then spreading out into rich alluvial plains, which not unfrequently, in the immediate vicinity of the larger streams, are converted into swamps. The climate, though tropical, has its excessive heat greatly modified by the inequalities of the surface, but concurs with the natural fertility of the soil in producing a vegetation of almost unequalled luxuriance & grandeur. In the forests are found at least sixty varieties of timber, admirably adapted for all purposes, in which elasticity, durability, or buoyancy is required; dye-woods, gums, drugs, perfumes, vegetable oils, & fruits in almost endless variety. Many of the hills are literally covered with the yerba-maté (Ilex Paraguensis), used as a substitute for the tea of China, & the principal beverage of one-half of the inhabitants of S. America. The large plains are roamed over by immense herds of cattle, which, though scarcely required for food in a country otherwise so richly provided, yield valuable articles of commerce, viz., hides, tallow, hair, horns, bones, &c.; & on all the alluvial tracts where cultivation is attempted, however primitive & imperfect, sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco, rice, maize, & in short the greater part of the most valuable products, both of the tropical & the temperate zones, are raised in profusion. The population bears no proportion to its capabilities, which, if fully developed, would probably furnish a larger amount of human subsistence than any other tract of equal extent on the surface of the globe. Unfortunately, various political causes have seriously interfered with its advancing prosperity. In the contest with the mother-country, its isolated position gave it decided advantage, & almost at once, by a single effort, it succeeded in emancipating itself from the Spanish yoke; but it was only to fall under one still more galling. Dr. Francia, who commenced his political career in 1811, as secretary to the revolutionary junta, having been elected consul, exchanged the name for that of dictator in 1814, & thenceforward, till his death in 1840, at the advanced age of 84, retained it with a firm grasp, both in name & in reality. His tyranny, justly regarded as one of the most remarkable political phenomena of modern times, was maintained by a system of espionage so rigorous, & at the same time so widely spread, as to bring fear & distress into every household: & by a strict prohibition of all intercourse with other nations. The thraldom ended with the dictator's life, & a popular form of government was immediately established, by the election of two consuls to serve for two years. This form of government, notwithstanding its obvious defects, has hitherto been well administered, & not only has the restriction on foreign intercourse been removed, but the country has been declared free & open both to foreigners & commerce. The benefits of this liberal arrangement have, however, been in a great measure frustrated by the selfish policy of the government of Buenos Ayres; which, taking undue advantage of its commands of the outlet of the La Plata, has hitherto been too successful in crippling the trade, not only of Paraguay, but of the extensive regions beyond it: but in October, 1852, in accordance with a decree of the Provisional Director of the Argentine Confederation, dated August 31, the navigation of the Rio-de-la-Plata, the Parana, and Uruguay, were opened to all foreign vessels under 120 tons register.

PARAHIBA, or PARAHYBA, two rivers of Brazil.—I. prov. Parahiba, to which it gives name, joins the Atlantic by an estuary, in lat. 7° 8′ S., lon. 34° 45′ W., after an E.ward course of upwards of 270 m. In summer its bed is dry beyond 20 leagues from its mouth, near which, on its S. b., is the city Parahiba.—II. (do Sul, or the Southern Parahiba), prov. San Paulo & Rio de Janeiro, enters the Atlantic at San Joao de Praya, lat. 21° 40′ S., lon. 40° 45′ W., after an E. course of 500 m. Chief affls., the Pombal, Muriahe, & Parahbuno, with which last it forms all the N. boundary of the prov. Rio.

PARAHIBA, a small prov. of N. Brazil, mostly betw. lat. 6° 30′ & 7° 30′ S., & lon. 34° 40′ & 38° 40′ W., having E. the Atlantic O., and inland the provs. Rio Grande de Norte, & Pernambuco. Area, 19,769 sq. m.

Pop. 260,000. Surface mostly elevated. Principal rivers, the Parahiba & Mangaruape. Chief products, cotton & sugar, with Brazil-wood, drugs, & timber. Cattle of European breeds are numerous. Principal towns, Parahiba, Alhandra, & San Miguel.—Parahiba, a maritime city, cap. prov., & the centre of its trade, on rt. b. of the Parahiba, near its mouth in the Atlantic, 65 m. N.N.W. Pernambuco. Pop. (1845, includ. dist.) 15,000. It consists of a lower & an upper town. The former is the commercial quarter; one of its chief edifices is a fine government warehouse. In the upper town the streets are wide and well paved, the architecture antiquated. Here are Franciscan and other convents, the principal churches, prison, governor's palace, military arsenal, & treasury, which last is built in an imposing style. Trade chiefly in sugar, cotton, & Brazil-wood. Near the city are some coffee plantations.—II. (do Sul), a town of the prov. and 40 m. N. Rio de Janeiro. Pop. of dist. 2,000. It was made head of an electoral college in 1840.

PARAHITINGA, a town, Brazil, prov. and 140 m. N.E. San Paulo, on lt. b. of the Parahiba. Pop. 4,000.

PARAMARIBO, the cap. town of Dutch Guiana, on the W. bank of the Surinam, 5 m. from its mouth in the Atlantic, lat. 5° 49′ N., lon. 55° 22′ W. Estimated pop. 20,000, mostly blacks. It is regularly and well built; streets unpaved, but ornamented with rows of tamarind & orange trees; & it has Lutheran, Calvinistic, R. Catholic, & English churches, Portuguese & German Jewish synagogues, and is the centre of the trade of the colony. Fort Zeelandia, N of the town, is the residence of the governor. In an hospital for lepers, on rt. b. of the Coppename, 450 patients are maintained at the expense of the colony. The Kwatta canal, begun 1846, is the first public work executed by free laborers.

PARAMAS, v., Franklin t., Bergen co., N. J. It contains a Dutch Reformed church & about 200 inhabitants.

PARAMATTA, a town of New South Wales, co. Cumberland, on the Paramatta river, 13 m. W.N.W. Sydney, with which it communicates daily by steamboats. Pop. 1846, 4,454. It consists mostly of a single street, at one end of which is the summer residence of the governor of the colony, with extensive grounds. It is the seat of the factory for females convicts, and it has also several orphan asylums, schools, barracks, hospitals, & an observatory. Steamers & coaches ply daily between it & Sydney.—The Paramatta river enters Port Jackson after an E. course of 12 m.

PARANÁ, a large river of S. America, and one of the principal which contribute to form the Plata, rises by numerous heads in the Brazilian prov. Minas Geraes, between lat. 22° & 23° S., & lon. 45° & 46° W., near the sources of the rivers Doce and San Francisco, and less than 120 m. from the Atlantic Ocean. It flows in a S.W. direction, bounding the state Paraguay on the E. & S., and separating it with the Brazil. prov. Matto Grosso from San Paulo, and the Plata des. Missiones & Corrientes. Near Corrientes, lat. 27° 25′ S., it joins the Paraguay river, and confers its own name on the united stream. Thenceforward its course is generally S.ward to within 50 m. N. Buenos Ayres, where it unites with the Uruguay river to form the estuary of the Plata. Total course is at least 2,000 m. In its upper part it receives numerous large affls., as the Paranahyba, Tiete, Pardo, Parnapanema, & Curitiba; but owing to falls, it is navigable only to the isl. Apipe, 100 m. above its junction with the Paraguay. It contains numerous fertile isls. Below this point it is navigable for vessels of 300 tons, and receives the considerable rivers Salado and Quarto from the W. Few towns border it in its upper part. In the territory of the Plata Confed., Candelaria, Itu, Itata, Corrientes, Santa Lucia, & Santa Fé, are on its banks. It is also a name of the Rio Negro (Brazil), which see.—For Paraná town, see BAJADA DE SANTA FE.

PARANAGUA, a maritime town of Brazil, prov. San Paulo, cap. comarca, on a bay of same name in the Atlantic, 170 ms. S.W. Santos. Pop. 7,000. It is mostly built of stone; its former Jesuits' college is now converted into public offices. Its port is excellent, and fitted for vessels of 400 tons.

PARANAHIBA, or PARANAHYBA, a riv. of Brazil, prov. Goyaz, joins the Corumba to form the Parana, 180 ms. S. Villa-Boa, after a W.ward course of about 500 miles. On it near its source is the town of Paranahiba.—Paranapanema & Paranan are other considerable rivers of Brazil, provs. San Paulo & Goyaz, respectively tributaries to the Parana & Tocantins.

PARIS (anc. Lutetia Parisiorum), the capital of France, and, after London, the largest & most populous city in Europe; lat. (observatory), 48° 50′ 12″ N., lon. 79° 23′ 02″ E. from the national observatory, Washington, & lon. 2° 20′ 30″ E. from London. Pop. 1851, 1,021,539. Situated 193 feet above the level of the sea, on both sides & on two islands of the Seine, 111 m. from its mouth. It has recently, & at the expense of about $100,000,000, been surrounded with fortifications, consisting of a wall 33 feet in height, bastioned & terraced, lined with a fosse about 20 feet deep, & embracing both banks of the Seine, with a continuous enclosure, & of outworks composed of 14 detached forts. These fortifications take in much of the suburbs, & even of the surrounding country; but the proper limits of the town are traced by an interior wall, erected at a much earlier date, for fiscal purposes. In this wall are 50 gates or barriers, which form the proper entrances of Paris, & at which the octroi, or duties on goods brought into it, are levied. Many of these barriers are magnificent structures. Among others may be specified the Barriere de Neuilly, consisting of two pavilions, & having in front the splendid triumphal arch De l'Etoile; the Barrières de Vincennes, de St. Martin, de Fontainbleau, de Reuilly, de Chartres, & de Passy. Outside the barriers & their connecting wall is a large zone, finely planted, which nearly makes the circuit of the town, & forms an excellent, though not very much frequented promenade. It receives the name of Outer Boulevards, to distinguish them from the Inner Boulevards, which form a similar internal zone, consisting, in their finest parts, of a magnificent central thoroughfare, bounded on either side with a double row of trees, under which a broad & elevated pathway has been formed, & lined by elegant shops & mansions, the whole forming a scene of animated gaiety & splendor, which no other capital in Europe can equal.

The Seine traverses the city in a W.N.W. direction, & has a medium breadth of about 450 feet, nearly one-third less than that of the Thames at London. It is shallow, & navigable only by barges & small steamers. Its quays are built of solid masonry, & form large terraces, with a roadway in the centre, & a footpath on either side, generally planted. They extend about 11 m., & in addition to the splendid walks which they afford, serve the important purpose of protecting the lower parts of the city from inundations, from which, previously to these erections, it often suffered. The number of bridges is 27, all of stone, with the exception of 7 suspension bridges, 3 of a combination of stone & iron, & 1 of wood. The most deserving of notice are the Pont d'Austerlitz, or Pont du Jardin des Plantes, 400 feet long by 37 feet broad, with stone piers, & five arches of cast iron; the Pont Neuf, an ancient bridge, the longest of all, centrally situated, & forming one of the principal thoroughfares; the Pont des Arts, a light & elegant iron bridge of 9 arches, resting on stone piers; the Pont de la Concorde, or Pont de Louis XVI., adorned with 12 colossal statues of white marble; and the Pont de Jena, a remarkably handsome structure, consisting of 5 elliptical arches, & decorated with a cornice imitated from the temple of Mars at Rome, & garlands of oak & laurel.

The houses are almost all built of white calcareous stone. Their general height is from five to six stories, arranged as distinct tenements, & reached by a common stair, as still usual in the cities & large towns of Scotland. Very frequently, however, the stair is not entered immediately from the street, but is preceded by a porte cocher or carriage entrance leading into a court, round the sides of which the houses rise in lofty piles; but of course the more spacious mansions are separate tenements.

Streets & Squares.—The streets in several of the newer parts of the town are straight, wide, airy, & excellently paved, both in the centre for carriages, & on the sides for foot passengers; but, as a general rule, the streets are irregular in the extreme, cutting each other, not in parallel lines, but at all kinds of angles, & many of them, even in leading thoroughfares, so narrow, that carriages have difficulty in passing, & persons on foot often run considerable risk of bodily injury. The best streets after the Inner Boulevards, which have been already mentioned, are the Rue de Rivoli, on the N. bank of the Seine, the Rue de la Paix, continued across the Place de Vendôme, & thereafter by the Rue de Castiglione, the Rue Royale, the Rue du Chaussé d'Antin, & the Rue des Pyramides. The squares are neither large nor numerous. By far the finest, both from its position & its buildings & monuments, is the Place de Concorde. It is situated between the gardens of the Tuileries on the E., & the still larger, if not finer gardens of the Champs Elysées on the W.; opens S. on the Pont Louis XVI., which leads directly to the Chamber of Deputies, & N. on the Rue Royale, terminated by the beautiful colonnade of the Madelaine; & is adorned with various monuments, of which the most conspicuous is an obelisk transported from Luxor in Egypt. The only other squares deserving of nôtice are the Place Vendôme, an irregular octagon, lined by lofty edifices of uniform appearance, the centre occupied by a lofty column modelled on that of Trajan at Rome, & covered with bass-reliefs cast from 1,200 pieces of cannon taken in war; the Place de la Bastile, occupying the site of the notorious prison of that name; the Place du Chatelet, with a fountain in its centre, consisting of a circular basin 20 feet in diameter, with columns 58 feet high, divided by bands of bronze gilt, inscribed with Napoleon's principal victories; & the Place du Carrousel, between the Tuileries & the Louvre, & containing a triumphal arch 45 feet high by 60 feet long & 20 feet broad, designed after the arch of Septimius Severus at Rome, consisting of a central, & two smaller lateral arches, the entablature supported by eight columns of red marble, over each of which is a statue, while a low attic above the entablature is crowned with a triumphal car, occupied by a female figure, & drawn by four bronze horses, the whole forming one of the finest monuments of which Paris can boast.

Public Buildings.—The public edifices & other objects of interest are so very numerous, that an enumeration of the most remarkable is almost all that can be here attempted.

Churches.—Of these the most celebrated is the Cathedral of Notre Dame, situated on one of the islands of the Seine, called the Isle de la Cité. It is a vast cruciform structure, with a lofty W. front, flanked by two massive square towers. Three ample portals, composed of a series of retiring arches, covered with figures, lead into the interior, which consists of a nave with double aisles & transepts, & terminates in an octagon. The whole length of the church is 390 feet, width of transept 144 feet, height of vaulting 102 feet, height of towers 204 feet, width of W. front 128 feet. The whole building, with exception of some comparatively modern alterations, is an early & pure style of pointed architecture, sufficiently provided, but by no means overloaded with ornaments, remarkable for their high degree of finish & delicacy. The church of La Madelaine is a modern structure of singular magnificence. It stands on an elevated platform fronting the N. end of the Rue Rivoli. Its style is purely Grecian. A colonnade of 52 isolated Corinthian pillars goes completely round it; & on the walls opposite to the spaces betw. the pillars, is a row of niches filled with colossal statues of saints. The pediment at the S. end, said to be the largest sculptured pediment in existence, exhibits an immense alto-relievo by Lemaire, covered with figures, many of them of gigantic dimensions. The interior consists of a vast unbroken nave, lined with rich marbles, and lighted from above by four circular apertures in a richly-gilded ceiling, supported by majestic Corinthian columns. The edifice is surpassingly gorgeous, but has none of the solemn majesty which should characterize a church. The church of St. Geneviève, once better known by the heathenish name of Pantheon, when it was intended to make it the final resting-place of such gods and demigods as France could furnish, stands on the S. side of the Seine, near the Jardin des Plantes, & makes a conspicuous appearance, with its large dome, 282 feet in height. It is nearly in the form of a Greek cross, 288 feet long by 252 feet broad, & is entered by a portico of 22 fluted Corinthian columns 60 feet in height, & 6 in diameter, supporting a triangular pediment of vast dimensions. The other churches most deserving of notice are those of St. Denis du St. Sacrement; St. Etienne du Mont, remarkable for its square tower & circular turret, a little detached from it, and interesting as the burial-place of Pascal; St. Eustache, after Notre Dame the largest church in Paris; St. Germain l'Auxerrois, with nothing so remarkable as its belfry, from which the signal for the massacre of St. Bartholomew was first tolled; St. Louis, St. Germain des Prés, St. Gervais, with a chapel regarded as the most beautiful in Paris; St. Laurent, St. Marguerite, St. Medard, St. Merri, St. Nicolas du Chardonnet, Nôtre Dame de Lorette, a beautiful modern church of small dimensions; St. Paul & St. Louis, on an elevated platform, approached by a flight of steps, with a magnificent front, fine colonnade, and a lofty dome; St. Pierre du Gros Caillou, St. Roch, the burial-place of Corneille, & the church of the court during the time of Louis Philippe; St. Severus, with a tower terminating in a singular pyramidal roof; St. Thomas d'Aquin; Du Val de Grace, less remarkable for external than for internal beauty, with a dome, heavy without, but so finely painted within, as to be considered one of the finest frescoes in France; St. Vincent de Paule, a splendid modern church, finely situated on an eminence; the church of the Sorbonne, so called from having belonged to the celebrated school of that name, containing the finely-sculptured tomb of the Cardinal de Richelieu; & St. Sulpice, a handsome edifice, commenced in the 17th, but not finished till the middle of the 18th century. The Protestants have several churches, of which the best are those of the Oratoire, & Visitation, formerly belonging to the Roman Catholics, but both ceded by Government to the French Calvinists. There are also two English Episcopal chapels, one of them a modern Gothic edifice, for the use of the embassy; a Greek chapel, which the Russian embassy attend, and two synagogues.

Palaces.—The Tuileries, so called from the tile-works which originally occupied its site, continued for centuries to be the chief Parisian residence of the sovereigns, till France ceased to possess them. It was commenced by Catherine de Medicis in 1564, was enlarged by Henry IV., & was brought nearly to its present form by Louis XIV. The extreme length of its façade is 1,008 ft., & its breadth 108 ft. Owing to the irregular manner in which it has been built, it is difficult to class it under any particular style of architecture; but the effect, more from the great length & varied outline, than from any excellence of detail, is very imposing. The principal front looks W. through the garden to the Place de la Concorde, & consists of a central façade, with columns on the first, second, & third stories, respectively of Ionic, Corinthian, & Composite orders, & of two pavilions. The flower-garden, immediately in front, is railed off, & intended to be private; but the rest of the garden or park, laid out in alleys & finely-planted groves, with sheets of water, & numerous groups of statues, is one of the principal holiday resorts of the citizens. East of the Tuileries, & mainly separated from it by Place & Rue du Carrousel, stands the Louvre, which was originally built to be, and still continues to be called a palace, though it has long ceased to be a state residence, & forms the great national repository of works of art. It forms the four sides of a square, & presents four external fronts. The principal entrance is by the E. front, which, taken as a whole, ranks as one of the finest pieces of architecture of any age. A striking feature in it is its grand colonnade, composed of twenty-eight coupled Corinthian columns, with a wide gallery behind. The S. front, facing the Seine, bears a considerable resemblance to the E., & almost vies with it in splendor. The W. & N. fronts are comparatively plain. The interior, with its contents, will be more appropriately noticed along with the museums. Not far from the Tuileries and Louvre stands the Palais-Royal, which is entered from the Rue St. Honore by a Doric arcade & gateway. It forms a court, the N. side of which contains the principal building, while the E. & W. sides consist of two wings, projecting towards the street; behind which, again, is the "Gallerie d'Orleans," a wide & lofty arcade, paved with marble & roofed with glass, & lined on either side with a range of elegant shops. Immediately N. is the garden of the Palais-Royal, forming a rectangle of 700 ft. long, N. to S., by 300 ft. broad. It is partly laid out as a flower-garden, & partly planted with rows of lime-trees. All around the garden are buildings of uniform architecture, standing on arcades, which form a broad gallery; while the first floor is laid out in shops, which are among the most elegant in Paris. The second floor used to be much occupied in a less reputable manner, by gambling & similar infamous establishments; but the most of them have been rooted out, & their place supplied by restaurant & coffee-shops. No space of equal dimensions is so much frequented as the Palais Royal, & nowhere can a stranger get a readier glimpse of all the phases of Parisian life. Much further to the W., at the corner of the Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, stands the Elysee Bourbon, which has many interesting associations connected with it, & the name of which has recently been rendered familiar from the occupation of it by Louis Napoleon. It does not possess much architectural merit. The Luxembourg, on the S. side of the Seine, was built by Marie de Medicis, on the model of the Pitti palace at Florence. It is a fine structure, remarkable alike for its solidity & the beauty of its proportions; & was the place of meeting of the Chamber of Peers, while that body existed.

Government & Municipal Buildings.—The Chamber of Deputies or Corps Legislatif is held in the Palais Bourbon, so called from having been originally erected by a duchess-dowager of Bourbon, & afterwards occupied by the house of Condé, a branch of that family. Its principal front looking N. towards the Seine, is adorned by a magnificent portico of twelve Corinthian columns, supporting a pediment with an allegorical bass-relief, & is approached by a flight of twenty-steps. Immediately behind is the chamber itself, a semi-circular hall, ornamented with twenty-four Ionic columns of white marble, & fitted up in crimson cloth & gold. The Palais de Justice, where the principal courts of justice are held, is an immense pile of building, situated on the W. part of the Ile de la Cité. The principal halls are those of the Court of Cassation, formerly the High Chamber of the parliament, & the Court of Assizes. The Hotel de Ville, situated in the Place de Grève, notorious for the murders committed in it during the revolution, forms an immense quadrangle, with four splendid façades. The ornaments of the principal front are richly sculptured. Over the central porch is a brazen equestrian bass-relief of Henry IV., & in the wall a series of niches filled with statues of the most distinguished Parisian magistrates. The interior court, approached by a flight of steps, is surrounded by an arcade & portico, with Ionic columns; the Grand Salle or the Salle du Fronde, occupying the whole length of the central portion of the building, is very magnificent. The Admiralty [Hotel de la Marine], forming the N.E. side of the Place de la Concorde, is a beautiful structure; which, under its original name of Garde Meuble de la Couronne, was the place where the crown jewels were kept, & previous to the revolution, contained an immense number of valuable & curious objects. The Mint [Hotel des Monnaies] fronts the Quai Conti, on the S. side of the Seine, & contains an immense collection of coins & medals; the ground plan includes eight courts, with ranges of buildings in which all the operations connected with coining are carried on. The Post office [Hotel des Postes], to the E. of the Palais-Royal, has a handsome front; but the whole building, though well arranged, does not possess much architectural merit. The Exchange [La Bourse] in the Rue Vivienne, is a beautiful modern structure, only completed in 1826; it is in the form of a parallelogram, 212 ft. by 126 ft., surrounded by a range of sixty-six columns, supporting an entablature & masked attic, & forming a covered gallery, which is approached by a flight of steps extending along the whole of the W. front. The Salle de la Bourse, where business is transacted, is a large apartment, of the Doric order, surrounded by arcades. The deeply-coved ceiling is divided into sixteen compartments, covered with fine monochrome drawings, which have the effect of bass-reliefs. The Tribunal de Commerce, & other courts more immediately connected with trade & commerce, are located in this building. The Treasury [Hotel des Finances] is an immense building, in the Rue de Rivoli. The Register office [Hotel des Archives Royaume] occupies the former palace of the Prince de Soubize, & is more interesting from the value of its records, extending over a period of 1,200 years, than remarkable for the merits of its architecture. In connection with the records of the Kingdom, may be mentioned its printing establishment [Imprimerie Royale], occupying the buildings of the Palais Cardinal; so-called from having originally belonged to the Cardinal de Rohan. It is one of the largest & best-regulated establishments of the kind in Europe, & possesses so complete an assortment of types, that it has printed the Lord's Prayer in 150 languages.

Museums, Libraries, &c.—At the head of these stands the magnificent collection of the Louvre, the buildings of which have already been described. It forms one of the chief attractions of the capital, & consists of various galleries, to each of which a slight reference must be made. The Museum of Paintings of the Italian, Flemish, & French Schools [Musée des Tableaux des Ecoles Italiennes, Flamandes, et Française] contains above 1,400 pictures; & though justly deprived of many of the master-pieces, which had been brought to it from all parts of Europe, is still one of the finest galleries in existence. In addition to it there is another Gallerie Française, containing modern French pictures, among which that of the Ports of France are conspicuous; & a large & excellent Spanish gallery. The Salle de Bijoux contains curious & valuable cups, vases, porcelain, jewellery, cameos, agates, & many remarkable articles of vertù, belonging chiefly to the middle ages. Adjoining is the Salle des Sept Cheminées, containing copies of some of Raphael's finest frescoes, in the Vatican. The Greek Museum [Musée Grec] is particularly rich in Etrurian & Grecian vases, & in articles obtained from Herculaneum & Pompeii. The Egyptian Museum is enriched with the fruits of the French researches in Egypt, &, in regard to all that relates to domestic life in its minuter details, is not surpassed by any other collection. The collection Standish—so called from an Englishman of that name who bequeathed it to Louis Philippe—contains some good original paintings, & a library of rare books; among others, the Bible of Cardinal Ximenes, valued at £5,000. From the ante-room of this collection, a small staircase leads to the Naval Museum [Musée de la Marines], which contains beautiful models of vessels of all classes, both finished & in every stage of construction; models, also, of the principal naval ports of France; & a museum of Indian arms & ornaments, from the Pacific & N. America. The Musée des Desines contains about 1,300 drawings, including numerous specimens of the great masters of all schools. The Musée des Antiques, entered from the vestibule at the bottom of the grand staircase, occupies a series of apartments on the ground floor, and forms a remarkable & interesting collection of about 1,100 articles, consisting of statues, busts, vases, &c. The Musee de la Sculpture Moderne contains the best specimens of sculpture & statuary which the modern French school has been able to furnish, but is poor in those of foreign artists. The Musée du Luxembourg, contained in the palace of that name, is appropriated to the finest works of living French artists, purchased by Government. The Musée d'Histoire Naturelle, together with the Jardin des Plantes or Botanical Garden, in which it stands, is at once one of the most attractive & instructive places of resort in Paris. The museum, properly so called, is rich in the collections of Cuvier & other distinguished names, & possesses, besides excellent specimens in all the branches of natural science, a good menagerie. The Musée d'Artillerie occupies five galleries; one containing suits of ancient armor, and the other four arms, instruments, machines, & models of those used by the artillery service. The Conservatoire des Artes et Metiers, occupying the very extensive buildings which formerly belonged to the abbey of St. Martin des Champs, contains a most valuable & interesting collection of machines, models, drawings, &c., relating to almost all branches of industry. The most important library is the Bibliothèque Royale, Imperiale, or Nationale (for it has borne all these names by turns), occupying a vast building, almost devoid of ornament, but containing one of the largest & most valuable collections in existence: the books & pamphlets amounting in number to about 1,000,000; the MSS., many of them of extreme rarity & interest, to 80,000; and the maps & plans to 300,000. In addition to these, there is a collection of engravings, contained in 80,000 vols. or portfolios, with 1,400,000 plates; a gallery of ancient sculpture, in which the most remarkable object is the Egyptian zodiac of Denderah; & a cabinet of antiquities, consisting chiefly of coins & medals, to the number of 100,000, many of them rare, & some unique. The other more important libraries are those of the Arsenal, 200,000 vols. & 6,300 MSS.; St. Geneviève, 250,000 vols. & 3,000 MSS.; Mazarine, at the Institute, 200,000 vols. & 3,700 MSS.; De la Ville, 55,000 vols.; De l'Institute, 100,000 vols.; De l'Université, 50,000 vols.; du Conseil de l'Etat, 80,000 vols.; De l'École de Medicine, 30,000 vols.; De Musée d'Histoire Naturelle, 30,000 vols.; & libraries of greater or less extent, attached to almost all the public institutions, & government, judicial, & municipal offices.

Educational Establishments.—The University of Paris, said to have been founded by Charlemagne, & long one of the most celebrated in Europe, was suppressed at the revolution, & an entirely new system of public education adopted. At the head of this system is placed the University of France, which, properly speaking, is only a board of education, consisting of a council of nine members, presided over by the Minister of Public Instruction, as grand master, & having under it twenty-two inspectors-general of studies. The most extensive school of Paris is the Academy, consisting of five faculties—sciences, with ten ordinary and eight supplementary professorships; letters, with twelve ordinary & seven supplementary; theology, with six ordinary & five supplementary; law, with seventeen ordinary & eight supplementary; & medicine, with twenty-six ordinary. After the Academy come the College Royal de France, with twenty-seven professors; the college attached to the Musée d'Histoire Naturelle, with fifteen; the colleges de Louis le Grand, Henri IV., Bourbon, St. Louis, & Charlemagne, attended each by about 1,000 pupils; the Ecole Polytechnique, established in the buildings of the old College de Navarre, a celebrated institution, in which the greatest mathematicians which France has produced have been teachers, & not a few of them have been formed; the Ecole Centrale des Arts et Manufactures, for the education of engineers, directors of manufactories, builders, &c.; the Ecole Normale, for training professors of a higher grade, & several Ecoles Normales Elementaires, for ordinary male & female teachers; Ecole des Ponts et Chaussée, consisting of about 100 pupils, taken from the Ecole Polytechnique, to be instructed in all the branches of civil engineering; Ecole des Mines, kept in the magnificent Hotel de Vendôme, with a full complement of professors in every branch relating to mining operations, & a most valuable mineral museum, which fills fifteen rooms, and contains the geological collection of the Paris Museum, formed by Cuvier & Brogniart; Ecole des Chartes, in which palæography, or the art of deciphering and studying ancient MSS. is taught; Ecole des Langues Orientales Vivantes [School of Living Oriental Languages], with seven professors; Ecole de Pharmacie, with ten professors, & the sole power of licensing apothecaries, who cannot practice till examined here; École Gratuite de Dessin, de Mathematique, et de Sculpture d'Ornament, a kind of mechanics' institute; Ecole Speciale et Gratuite de Dessin pour les Jeunse Personnes, in which young women, intended for the arts or similar professions, have the means of studying figures, landscapes, flowers, &c.; Palais & Ecole des Beaux Arts, in which gratuitous lectures on all subjects connected with the arts are given, by twenty-one professors; Ecole Veterinaire, a celebrated establishment, not in Paris, but at Alfort, in its vicinity; Conservatoire de Musique et de Declamation, for the instruction of both sexes in music, singing, &c., by a numerous body of the first professors, male & female; and numerous primary schools, superior and infant schools, &c.

Benevolent Institutions.—The civil hospitals of Paris are divided into three classes—general hospitals special hospitals, & hospices or almshouses. The general hospitals are the Hotel Dieu, the most ancient of all the Parisian hospitals, situated partly on the S. side of the Ile de Cité, & partly on the S. side of the river, here crossed by a covered bridge, & forming a very extensive & admirably-managed infirmary, which, on an average, annually receives about 11,000 patients; Hopital de la Pitié, with 600 beds, & an average of above 10,000 patients; Hopital de la Charité, with 530 beds, & 8,000 patients; & the Hopitals Necker, Cochin, & Beaujon. The chief special hospitals are those of St. Louis for cutaneous diseases; Hopital du Midi and Hopital de Loureine, both for syphilitic complaints; Hopital de la Maternité, Hopital des Enfans Malades, & Hopital des Cliniques. The hospices are the Bicêtre or Hospice de la Vieillessee, for old men; & the Salpetrière or Hospice de la Vieillessee, for old women; two similar Hospices des Incurables; & the Hospice des Enfans Trouvés [Foundling hospital], a large establishment, in which the abuses notorious in regard to foundling hospitals, notwithstanding some attempts here made to remedy them, continue almost unabated. In addition to the above classified hospitals, are numerous establishments of a benevolent nature, well deserving of notice. The most celebrated of these is the Hotel des Invalides, or asylum for old soldiers, a magnificent establishment, capable of receiving 5,000 pensioners. Its gilded dome makes it one of the most conspicuous buildings in Paris, & it is also one of the largest & most magnificent, presenting a noble front in three projecting masses, 612 ft. long, & four stories high. Among other benevolent institutions are the lunatic asylum [Maison Royal de Charenton]; two blind asylums, the deaf & dumb institute [Institution Royale des Sourds Muets], & a great variety of societies, both public & private, for distributing food and clothing, & reclaiming those who have gone astray.

Prisons & Correctional Establishments.—The former are nine in number, & several of them have acquired a dreadful notoriety from the deeds perpetrated in them during the fury of the great revolution. The principal are La Force, containing 1,200 separate cells, & distinguished by its classification of prisoners & excellent sanitary regulations; St. Pelagie, recently converted partly into a political prison, & partly into a kind of hulks for convicts whose punishment is of short duration; St. Lazare, a general female prison, which has generally an average of about 1,000, and receives annually about 10,000 prisoners; Depôt des Condamnés for criminals condemned to the hulks or to death, & remarkable for being at once light, airy, and healthy, & yet one of the strongest places of custody ever erected; & the Maison Centrale d'Education Correctionnelle, with very much the air of a feudal castle. The prisons to which the most mournful interest attaches, are the Palais du Temple, from which Louis XVI. was led forth to the scaffold; the Conciergerie, from which Marie Antoinette was led forth to the same fate; & the Abbaye, the most gloomy of all the Parisian dungeons, and, during the reign of terror, a perfect den of horrors.

Places of Resort and Amusement.—Of the former, several have already been incidentally mentioned, and the only one which seems to call for more special notice, is the most celebrated of all—the Champs Elysées. It stretches W. from the Place de la Concorde to the Barrière de l'Etoile for about 1¼ ms., gradually widening out from 373 yards to 700 yards. It consists of a central road, lined with trees, & with wide walks and open spaces on each side, crowded, particularly on holidays, with all grades of Parisian society, & presenting one of the gayest & liveliest scenes which can well be imagined. The public fêtes all take place here; and, even on the most ordinary occasions, all kinds of attractions are to be found in the shape of shows, musical bands, panoramas, circuses, &c. The theatres of Paris & its immediate suburbs afford accommodation for 30,000 persons; & the passion for such amusements is so strong & general, that the attendance is usually full. The most important are the Academie Royale de Musique or French Opera, capable of containing about 2,000 persons; the Italian Opera, the Opera Comique, the Theatre Française, the Odeon, the Theatre de la Gaieté, for vaudevilles & melodramas; Theatre des Folies Dramatiques, Theatre du Vaudeville, Theatre des Varietés, Theatre du Palais Royal, Theatre Porte St. Martin, Theatre de l'Ambigu Comique, Theatre du Pantheon, remarkable as occupying one of the earliest churches of Paris; and the Cirque Olympique. Numerous other places of amusement are always open, many of a more rational, but not a few also of a questionable kind. A place of resort, though certainly not of amusement, furnishing one of the most interesting & impressive sights of the capital, is the celebrated cemetery of Père-la-Chaise.

Societies—Literary, Scientific, &c.—At the head of these stands the Institute de France, which has acquired such celebrity, that the most distinguished European philosophers covet the honor of being admitted to it as foreign associates. It consists of 224 ordinary members, all of whom receive a salary of about $500; 42 free academicians, without salary; 33 associates, & 220 correspondents; & is divided into five sections or academies—the Academie Française, specially devoted to the French language; the Academie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, for general literature, learned languages, and antiquities; the Academie des Sciences, subdivided into 11 sections, embracing the different branches of physics, mathematics, natural history, medicine, rural economy, &c.; the Academie des Beaux Arts, for painting, sculpture, architecture, engraving, & music; & the Academie des Sciences, Morales et Politiques, for history, moral science, jurisprudence, political economy, & statistics. The Institute overshadows most of the other societies, many of which, however, have distinguished themselves, & are well known under the names of the Antiquarian, Philomathic, Natural History, Geographical, Statistical, Philotechnic, Asiatic, Anatomical, Medical, & Agricultural Societies, &c.

Among the many eminent persons which Paris has produced, may be mentioned the great Condé, Prince Eugène of Savoy, Rousseau the poet, Thou the historian, Moliere, Boileau, Voltaire, Rollin, d'Alembert, the painters Lebrun & David, the geographer d'Anville, Lavoisier, Madame Roland & Madame de Staël.

Manufactures & Trade.—The Government possesses only two properly manufacturing establishments—that known by the name of the Gobelins, celebrated for its tapestry & carpets, made, however, not for sale, but the supply of the palaces, & for presents; & that of tobacco, which the Government holds as a monopoly, & carries on in a vast establishment on the S. side of the Seine, producing about a fifth of all the snuff used in the kingdom, & yielding an annual profit estimated at $14,000,000. In the other branches, which are free, the most important manufactures are articles of Jewellery & precious metals; ebony & ivory, trinkets, fine hardware, paper-hangings, saddlery, & other articles in leather; cabinet-work, carriages, various articles of dress, silk & woollen tissues, particularly shawls and carpets; lace, embroidery, artificial flowers, combs, machines, mathematical & optical instruments, types, books, engravings, refined sugar, chemical products, &c. The value of all the industrial products of Paris, in 1847, was, after a very careful investigation, estimated at $292,725,670. In 1848, during the turmoil of the last revolution, they fell to less than one-half of what they were before. The value of the exports, composed almost entirely of the above articles of manufacture, was declared at the custom-house of Paris, to amount in value in 1850, to $11,095,945. The estimated revenue of the city for 1852, was $9,303,630; & the expenditure, $9,703,630.

People.—The inhabitants of Paris have long considered themselves at the head of European civilization; & if such an eminence can be gained by mere external polish, they perhaps deserve it. In matters of dress & fashion, the lead is conceded to them by a kind of unanimous consent; & though their manners have suffered considerably by the stormy periods through which they have passed, their native politeness has not been lost; & none succeed better, not only in practicing the agreeable arts of life, but even in observing the outward decencies of society. Beneath this pleasing surface, however, a strong & polluted current is perpetually running; & there is no part of the world where the more substantial virtues are more rare, & where so much dissoluteness exists within such narrow limits.

History.—The origin of Paris is involved in obscurity, but the account to which most credit appears to be given, is, that a wandering tribe having settled upon the banks of the Seine, built huts upon the Ile de la Cité, to which they retired with their flocks & herds when any of the neighboring tribes made incursions upon them, which they were otherwise unable to resist. To this natural stronghold they gave the name of Lutetia, supposed to be derived from the Celtic lutun lezi, meaning Dwelling of the Waters; while they themselves, for some reason not well explained, took the name of Parisii. When Julius Cæsar conquered Gaul, he accordingly here found a tribe of Parisii, with a capital called Lutetia, connected with the shore by two bridges. They defended themselves bravely, but were overcome; & Cæsar, after rebuilding the town, which had been nearly destroyed, surrounded it with walls, & further defended it by erecting two forts at the extremity of the bridges. The Gallic were exchanged for Roman divinities; civilization made rapid progress, & in the course of the 500 years of the Roman dominion, Lutetia rose to be a place of considerable importance, & became the capital of N. Gaul. In the beginning of the 5th century it suffered much from the northern hordes, & ultimately fell into the hands of the Franks, headed by Clovis, who, having embraced Christianity, made it his residence in 508. Under his descendants it became the capital, first of a kingdom of same name, & then of the kingdom of Neustria. In 987 a new dynasty was established in the person of Hugo Capet, from whose reign downwards, Paris has continued to be the residence of the kings of France. In the latter part of the 12th century, Philip Augustus mounted the throne, & built the castle of the Louvre & several churches, paved the streets, & enclosed a large part of the buildings with walls, flanked with towers. The various schools which had existed separately, became united under the common name of University, which now began to occupy a prominent place among the literary establishments of Europe. Under Charles V. new walls & ditches were erected, with the view more especially of guarding against the inroads of the English, who made frequent incursions into the faubourgs. The fortifications failed to produce the desired effect; for in 1420, during the reign of Charles VI., the English made themselves masters of the city, & were not dislodged from it for sixteen years. In 1437 & 1438, under Charles VII., Paris was ravaged by pestilence and famine, & such was the desolation, that wolves appeared in herds, & prowled about the streets. Under Louis XI. a course of prosperity again commenced. The area of the city extended over 1,414 ac., & its population amounted to 300,000 souls. In 1470 the first printing-presses were introduced, & the post-office was established. Francis I. demolished the old castle of the Louvre, & commenced a new palace on its site, rebuilt several churches, opened better communications between the different districts, & made so many improvements that the whole city assumed a new aspect. But the Reformation having commenced, and counted numerous converts in all parts of the kingdom, bigotry & intolerance in alarm began to do their work, & the fires of persecution were lighted up. Paris, in consequence, became the theatre of many bloody deeds, crowned at length, in 1572, during the reign of Charles IX., by the horrible massacre of St. Bartholomew. During these transactions the city could not prosper; & though some new edifices were commenced, among others the palace of the Tuileries, it was not till the wars of religion ceased at least to be openly carried on, that the work of embellishment in good earnest again commenced. The Hotel de Ville was begun, the Pont Neuf finished, great additions made to the Tuileries, & many new streets & quays built. The works begun were completed, and many others undertaken during the reign of Louis XIII. & XIV.; the latter of whom, notwithstanding his lavish expenditure at Versailles, was able to rival all that his predecessors had done for the embellishment of Paris. Louis XV. had contributed his share of improvements, & Louis XVI. was proceeding in a better spirit, in the same cause, when the Revolution commenced, & with it the work of demolition, carried on to such an extent that some of the finest edifices of the city were converted into ruins, & many of the most venerable monuments of art completely destroyed. A stop was put to this barbarism, first by the Directory, & afterwards by Bonaparte, by whom, in particular, many works, distinguished alike by utility & splendor, were undertaken & completed. During the restoration of the Bourbons, the work of embellishment did not proceed with much rapidity; but from 1830, when Louis Philippe was called to the throne, to 1848, when the revolutionary spirit once more gained the ascendant, & drove him into exile, Paris made wonderful advances, both in magnificence & general prosperity. Since then it has been her lot more than once to see bloody battles waged, & hear the thunder of artillery roaring in her streets.

PEKING, or PEKIN (Chinese, Pih-king, "the northern capital"), the cap. city of China, and modern metropolis of the Chinese empire, cap. prov. Chil-i, in a sandy plain, between the Pei-ho, & its affl. the Hoen-ho, 100 m. N.W. the mouth of the former river in the Yellow sea, and 50 m. S. the great wall of China. Lat. of imperial observatory, 39° 54′ 13″ N., lon. 116° 28′ 54″ E. Mean annual temperature, 54° .8; winter, 26° .7; summer, 81° .1, Fahr. Pop. has been estimated (probably much too highly) at 2,000,000. It consists of two contiguous cities, each separately encircled by lofty walls, & together entered by 16 gates, & occupying an area of from 25 to 28 sq. m., though much of this space is occupied by gardens and enclosures, the houses seldom being more than one story in height. The S., or Chinese city, the seat of commerce, & residence of the majority of the pop., is intersected throughout by 4 wide and regular thoroughfares, which abound with shops of all descriptions, & are continually filled with a motley crowd. At the points where these streets meet each other, are large arches; but except these, and a temple to the god of agriculture, there would seem to be no edifices in this quarter deserving notice. The houses are of brick, with red-tiled roofs, & the city is unpaved & undrained. The Northern, Tartar, or imperial city, consists of three separate enclosures. The outer of these, formerly appropriated to the Tartar garrison, is now mostly occupied by Chinese traders; but it contains 5 of the supreme tribunals of the empire. The 2d enclosure (Hwang-Ching, "the august city"), is 6 m. in circuit, & entered by 4 large, & several smaller, gates. In it are extensive public granaries, a military arsenal, & seminary; the college & buildings of the Russian embassy, an astronomical and a magnetic observatory, the great temples of ancestors, and of Peace, the latter having attached to it an institution for Buddhic lamas; the national college of China, and the residences of the great dignitaries of the empire. The inner enclosure, or "forbidden city," with walls 2 m. in circumference, faced with yellow tiles, and surrounded by a moat faced with masonry, is appropriated to the public & private palaces of the emperor & empress, & has a magnificent temple of the imperial ancestors, pavilions, gardens, a lake, and an artificial mntn. Outside of both cities are open suburbs; and Peking has, besides its numerous temples & pagodas, a fine mosque, a Greek church & convent, & a Roman Catholic chapel. About 10 m. W.N.W. is an imperial park, covering at least 12 sq. m., & containing 30 palaces of the emperor and great officers of state. Peking has a large printing & bookselling trade, & manufs. of colored glass, idols, & other articles; but its inhabs. chiefly depend for subsistence on employment connected with the court. The Pei-ho is navigable for boats to within 20 m., and communicates with the grand canal, by which most of the provisions for the supply of the city are conveyed.

The Alleghany mountains cross the state from S.W. to N.E., & there are many smaller ranges on each side of the principal ridge & parallel to it. The south-eastern & north-western parts of the state are either level or moderately hilly. The soil is generally fertile, & much of it is of a superior quality; the best land on the south-east is on both sides of the Susquehanna. Between the head waters of the Alleghany and Lake Erie the soil is very fertile. The anthracite coal region is immense. The Mauch Chunk, Schuylkill & Lyken's Valley coal-field extends from the Lehigh river across the head waters of the Schuylkill, & is 65 miles in length, with an average breadth of 5 miles. The Lackawanna coal-field extends from Carbondale on the Lackawannock, to 10 miles below Wilkesbarre on the Susquehanna. The Shamokin field has been less explored. Iron ore exists in nearly every county, & in the vicinity of Pittsburg vast quantities are manufactured. Beds of copper & lead exist, & quarries of marble & building stone abound. There are in the south part valuable mineral springs.

There were in the state in 1850, 8,628,619 acres of improved & 6,294,728 of unimproved land in farms; cash value of farms, $407,876,099; & the value of implements and machinery, $14,722,541. Live stock.—Horses, 350,398; asses & mules, 2,259; milch cows, 530,224; working oxen, 61,527; other cattle, 562,195; sheep, 1,822,387; swine, 1,040,366; value of live stock, $41,500,053.

PENNY'S FERRY, Henry co., Ill.

PENOBSCOT, r., the largest river of Maine, consists of two main branches. The larger or western branch rises in the highlands, in the western part of Maine, & which divide it from Canada, & not far from the head waters of the Chuadiere river, which flows into the St. Lawrence. After a considerable course to the E. it falls into Chesumcook lake, whence passing S.E., & through Pemadumcook & other lakes, it unites with the eastern branch. This branch, called the Seboois, rises in some small lakes near the head waters of the Aroostook r., & flows nearly S. to the junction, 54 m. above Bangor. After the junction, the river proceeds in a S.E. direction until it receives Mattawamkeag river, from the N.E., which is its principal tributary on the E. side. Its direction is then S.S.W., until it receives the Piscatiquis, its chief western tributary; it then holds a direction S. by W. to its entrance into Penobscot bay. Its upper portions have many falls & rapids, furnishing many excellent mill sites. It is about 275 miles long from its source to the ocean. It is navigable 50 miles from the ocean, to Bangor, for vessels of a large size, & for boats to a considerable distance above that. The tide rises at Bangor more than 20 feet, to which the same causes in a measure contribute, which produce such an enormous tide in the Bay of Fundy—the wedge-like form of the bay, & the current produced by the return of the gulf stream. There is a number of islands in the river above Bangor, the principal of which is Oldtown, the residence of the Penobscot tribe of Indians, who own all the islands in the river as far as the forks, several miles above Mattawamkeag river, several of which are considerable, & fertile. They have a considerable annuity, secured to them by the state. There are sev. flourishing towns on the Penobscot bay & river. On the E. side are Castine, Bucksport, & Orrington. On the W. side are Thomaston, Camden, Belfast, Prospect, Frankfort, Hamden, Bangor, & Orono. The Penobscot bay is a fine body of water, & extends from the ocean, at Owls Head, to Belfast bay, about 20 miles. Across the mouth of the bay, from Owls Head to Burnt Coat island, is about 30 miles. It embosoms a number of fine islands, the principal of which are Deer isl., Fox islands, Isle of Haut, Long island, & some others. From a hill back of Camden, & from other points, the view of this bay, with its islands & numerous vessels, is exceedingly beautiful. The bay and river contain many fine harbors, the principal of which are Castine, Belfast, Bucksport, & Bangor; & has on its headlands & islands 5 light houses. Tonnage of the Collection dist. 1853, 45,724 tons, & including Belfast & Bangor, 136,372 tons.

PENOBSCOT, county, Me. Situated in the N. part of the state, & is of great extent, though but a small portion of it is settled. Area, 2,500 sq. m. PERSAIM, a town, Burmese dom. [BASSEIN.]

PERSANTE, a river of Prussian Pomerania, rises near the vill. Persanzig, & after a N.W. course of 70 m., enters the Baltic at Colberg. It is navigable for the last 18 m. of its course.

PERSEPOLIS, Istakhar & Takhti Jemshid, the anc. cap. of Persia, the traces of which exist in a fine plain, prov. Fars, on an affl. of the Bundemir river, from 25 to 30 m. N.E. Shiraz. Its ruins cover a wide surface; & on a terraced platform, 1,450 feet in length, & from 800 to 900 feet in width, are large gateways, numerous columns, & bas-reliefs, the whole supposed to be the remains of the palace of Darius, destroyed by Alexander. The walls are covered with inscriptions in arrow-headed characters, & numerous tombs are cut in the adjacent mountains.

PERSERIN, a town, Europ. Turkey. [PRISREND.]

PERSHORE, a mkt. town of Engl., co. & 8¼ m. S.E. Worcester, on the navigable Avon, here crossed by a stone bridge. Area of its two pas. 12,910 ac. Pop. 1851, 4,886; do. of the t. 2,717, partly engaged in manuf. of hosiery. Town well built, has a large cruciform church, originally a part of an abbey, of which some other remains still exist. Mkts., Tuesday. It is a polling place for E. div. of co., & the head of a poor-law union.

PERSIA (IRAN), a country of W. Asia, comprising, in its widest acceptation, the region between the Caspian Sea & the Indian Ocean, from the Oxus & Indus to Kurdistan & the Persian Gulf. Its boundaries have undergone many changes, but it is now politically divided into Western Persia, or doms. of the Persian Shah, whose cap. is Tehraun, & Eastern Persia or Cabool. Persia Proper lies between lat. 26° & 40° N., & lon. 44° & 61° E., having W. Asiatic Turkey, N. the Russian gov. Transcaucasia, the Caspian Sea, and the desert of Kharesm (Khiva), E. Afghanistan & Beloochistan, & S. the Arabian Sea & Persian Gulf. Area loosely estimated at 450,000 sq. miles. Pop. probably 8,000,000.

The following are the great divisions of the country:—

Modern names.	Ancient names.	Chief towns.
Azerbijan.	Media Atropatene.	Tabrees.
Irak Ajemi.	Media Magna.	Tehraun.
Ardelan.	Elymais.	Sennah.
Luristan.	Syro-Media.
Khuzistan.	Susiana.	Shuster.
Fars.	Persis.	Shiraz.
Laristan.	Mesambria.	Lar.
Kerman.	Karmania.	Kerman.
Ghilan.	Co. of Gelæ.	Reshd.
Mazanderan.	Co. of Japyri.	Balfroosh.
Astrabad.	Hyrcania.	Astrabad.
Khorasan.	Aria.	Nishapoor.
Yezd.	Artacene.	Yezd.

Its central part (Irak-Ajemi, & the greater portion of Fars) is a table land. Average height from 2,500 to 3,500 feet above the sea, but traversed by mntn. ranges rising to upwards of 7,000 to 8,000 feet, & bounded N.ward by the Elburz chain, prolonged from Azerbijan E.ward to the Paropamisan mountains in Afghanistan, & S.ward by another chain stretching from Koordistan E.ward to the mountains of W. Beloochistan. This table land contains in its W. part many irrigated and fertile tracts, but nearly all the E. part of Persia is a wide & irreclaimable salt desert, forming a portion of that sterile zone which extends from the Atlantic throughout the Sahara of Africa, Arabia, Central Asia, & Mongolia, to the mountains on the N frontier of the Chinese empire. S. of the table land also, in the provs. bordering on the Persian Gulf, the country is mostly parched up & barren, & the heats of summer are almost insupportable. The absence of sufficient water is one of the great disadvantages suffered in Persia. Except the Aras, forming the N.W. frontier, the Sefidrood & Gurgan, which enter the Caspian Sea, the Kerah, Karun, Jerahi, &c., affls. of the Tigris & Shatul-Arab, in Khuzistan, & the Bundemir in Fars, the rivers are quite insignificant, & by far the greater portion of the country is arid & unproductive. Azerbijan & the Caspian provs. must, however, be excluded from this general description. N. of the Elburz mountains the country is covered with dense forests of oak, elm, beech, &c., interspersed with fine pastures, & numerous orchards & vineyards. The climate of these provs. is very similar to that of Europe, the grains common in which continent, with rice, are plentifully raised. Besides grain, the principal products of Persia are cotton, tobacco, silk, gallnuts, madder, yellow berries, opium, gum-ammoniac, assafœtida, & other drugs; wool, wine, rose water, saffron, dates, & other fruits. Copper mines have been wrought in some of the N. provs., & lead mines in Fars & Kerman. Near Nishapoor are some famous mines of turquoise, a gem peculiar to Persia. Rock salt is abundant in most parts of the country, & salt is also procured from the waters of the lakes Urumiyah & Bakhtegan. Coal, iron, naphtha, & garnets, are other chief mineral products. Domestic animals include most species common in Europe, & the camel, wild ass, & argali sheep, with some formidable predatory tribes, are native in Persia. The breeds of horses are very superior, sheep are every where abundant, & with cattle they compose the principal wealth of the wandering tribes of Moguls, Toorks, Uzbeks, & Kurds, who dwell in all the outlying provs. of the kingdom. Principal manufs. are of silk fabrics, of all kinds; in the chief cities, shawls, of goat's hair, especially in Kerman, carpets, felts, cotton cloths, cutlery & arms, glass, pottery, leather, & saddlery. Commerce extensive, notwithstanding the absence of any roads but mule tracks. It is chiefly with the adjacent countries, with Russia by way of the Caspian, & with British India & England by way of the Persian Gulf. Exports consist of the native products already enumerated, with copper wares, saffron, specie, skins, and sabres, & they are roughly estimated to amount in all to 3,500,000*l.* in annual value. Imports from India are indigo, chintzes, muslins, calicoes, gold & silver brocades, gums, china ware, sugar, shawls, & metals; from Turkey, European goods & specie; from Russia, iron, broadcloth, calicoes, gold lace, & numerous manufactured goods, tea, quicksilver, & furs; from England, woollen & cotton fabrics, shawls, jewellery, arms, cutlery, watches, & metallic wares in general. A large proportion of the British cottons imported at Trebizond on the Black Sea is intended for the Persian mkts. Principal ports of Persia are Bushire & Gombroon, on the Persian Gulf; & Enzelli, Balfrush, & Asterabad, on the Caspian Sea. Government despotic. The shah is assisted by a grand vizier, who exercises control over the military & foreign departments, & by a lord high treasurer, who superintends the revenue & home arrangements. Each prov., or important dist. of a prov., is governed by a beglerbey, usually a prince of the blood, or a nobleman of high rank, who appoints hakims over the subordinate dists. Each town & vill. has its magistrates, who are generally chosen by the people. Ann. revenue of the shah, chiefly derived from land & capitation taxes, custom duties, tribute from wandering races, &c., has been estimated at from 1,500,000*l.* to 2,000,000*l.* The pop. is very mixed. The Parsees, who appear to preserve more fully than the rest a purity of descent from the ancient Persians, are now nearly confined to the city Yezd, & some towns in Kerman, where they still retain fire-worship. The pop. of the towns & settled dists. generally is a race descended from Persians, Turks, Tartars, Georgians, Armenians, Arabs, & all the other nations who have at different periods held sway in the country. They are Mohammedans of the Shiah sect, rejecting the authority of the three first caliphs, on which & other accounts, there is between them & the Turks, Arabs, Bokharese, & most other Mussulmen, a perpetual feud. The Persians are a handsome, active, & generally warlike people. Complexion varying from fair to dark olive, with quick, lively imagination, & agreeable address, versatile & pliable, but insincere, & immoral in their habits. The nomadic tribes consist of Arabs in the S.; Turkmans, Moghuls, Uzbeks, in the E. & N.E.; & Kurds in the W. They live in tents, subsisting on the produce of their herds & on plunder; & they furnish most part of the armed force, which is very variable in amount, but has been estim. lately at 80,000 men.

PERSIAN GULF, an arm of the Indian Ocean, betw. Arabia & Persia. Lat. 24° to 30° N., lon. 48° to 56° 30′ E. Length, 550 m., breadth varies to 220 m. At its N.W. extremity it receives the Shat-ul-Arab, formed by the union of the Euphrates & Tigris rivers, and the Karun. It communicates E.ward with the Arabian Sea by a strait 50 miles across. It contains numerous islands, the principal being Kisham, Ormuz, Bushcab, and Karak, off its N. or Persian coast, & the E. India Company's & Barein isls., on its Arabian side, around which last named an extensive pearl fishery exists. Shores almost everywhere arid and sterile. On them are the cities Bassorah & Bashire, and the towns Congoon, Nackiloo, Gombroon, Zabarah, El Khatiff, and Grane.

The double Cordillera of the Andes traverses Peru from S.E. to N.W., separating it into three regions—the central or Montana, which has an average elevation of 12,000 feet above the ocean; the eastern, forming a part of the great central plain of S. America; and the W. or Valles between the mnns. & the Pacific, & which has an average breadth of 60 or 70 m. The Andes and their branches are estimated to occupy 200,000 sq. m. of the surface, and one peak, the Nevado de Chuquibamba rises to 21,000 feet in height. Principal rivers, the Maranon, Huallaga, & Ucayale with the Apurimac, all having a N.ward course, & tribs. to the Amazon, which waters most part of the N. frontier. About half of the lake Titicaca is comprised in Peru. The whole coast region is arid & destitute of timber; and only the Pina river in this division is at all navigable. Rain rarely falls in the coast valleys of Peru W. of the Andes, but fogs and dews are frequent. Climate on the coast sultry & unhealthy, but higher up mild & salubrious. On the E. slopes of the Peruvian Andes rain falls copiously. Soil in the valleys of the upland region highly fertile, & here the grains of Europe are successfully raised. Extensive pastures also exist in this region, where sheep introduced by Europeans have been acclimated, and multiply with amazing rapidity. The vast plains E. of the mountains have been but imperfectly explored; they appear to be in great part covered with dense forests. In the hotter portions of the country, sugar, maize, cotton, indigo, tobacco, yams, sweet potatoes, cocoa, and fine fruits, with cinchona bark, sarsaparilla, copaiba, vanilla, & other drugs, & valuable timber, are principal products. Peru has long been famous for its mineral wealth. Besides the precious metals, it produces iron, copper, tin, coal, & nitrate of soda. The Sierra, between the two ridges of the Andes, is rich in mines; and Huancavelica is a celebrated mine of quicksilver. The llama, alpaca, guanaco, & vicuna are natives of the country, & the first especially is used as a beast of burden; mules are, however, mostly employed for travelling. Coarse cotton & woollen cloths and leather goods are pretty generally made, with fine cloaks and blanketing, at Tarma; iron wares at Caxamarca; gold & silver articles, & jewellery, at Lima, Arequipa, & Cuzco: but in general manuf. goods are imported from the U. States & Europe, in return for raw produce. The want of roads interposes great obstacles to internal traffic; though since the independence of Peru, a trade has been carried on with the Brazilian dists. on the Amazon by way of the Huallaga, down which cotton, gums, resins, sarsaparilla, and wax are exported. The Chincha & Lopez isls., off the coast of Peru, contain immense deposits of guano. These isls. have been estimated as containing 46,632,000 tons of this material, which produces a large ann. rev. to the Repub. The maritime trade is chiefly with the ports on the W. side of America, but that with the United States & Europe is considerable; the exports consisting of bullion, bark, chinchilla skins, cotton, copper ore, vicuna, alpaca, & sheep's wool, hides and sugar. The total value of imports from the United States, Great Britain, France, & other countries, amount to about $2,000,000 annually. The exports of guano in 1852, amounted 220,500 tons, 22,000 of which went to the United States, and the remainder to England & France. Principal comm. ports are Callao, Islay, Payta, Lambeyeque, Huanchaco, & Arica. These are ports of entry for foreign commerce, but there are others open to the coasting trade and for exportation of the produce of the country; these are, Tumbez, Pacasmayo, Casma, Huarho, Pisco, Chala, Ylo, & Iquique, & also the harbors of Sechura, Santa, Samano, Huarmez, Supe, Echeneque, Chancay, Ancon, Cerro Azul, Chincа, Caucato, Nasca, Quilca, Cocotea, Morro de Sama, & Pisagua. Callao, the port of Lima, is the only one of unlimited deposit. The constitution is framed on the basis of that of the United States of America. The legislative body consists of a senate, & a chamber of deputies, one of the latter chosen for every 20,000 inhabitants by electoral colleges composed of one elector for every vill. of 200 inhabitants. The executive government is vested in a president, popularly chosen for six years, and assisted by a council of state (instituted 1845) chosen by the legislature. Each dep. has a prefect, & a junta composed of two members from each of its provs. In every prov. is a sub-prefect; in each of its dists. a justice of peace, & in each town, or Indian commune, a mayor. Every vill. entitled to name an elector of deputies, has a municipal body. With a few exceptions every Peruvian enjoys the rights of citizenship. Lima has a university, and other colleges. Lancasterian & other schools are pretty general in the towns. The Roman Catholic is the state religion, but other religions are tolerated. Public debt 1853, $50,500,000. Annual revenue, $9,450,000; expenses, $8,856,500. Peru was conquered from the dynasty of the Incas, by the troops of Pizarro in 1532, from which time it remained one of the most important foreign possessions of Spain, until it acquired independence in 1821.

PERUGIA, Perusia, a city of Central Italy, Pontif. Sta., cap. deleg., 10 m. E. of the lake of Perugia, on the S. declivity of the Apennines. Pop. 18,500. It is enclosed by walls. Public buildings comprise a large cathedral, with several fine paintings, & a library of rare MSS., upwards of 100 other churches, & 50 monastic establishments, all more or less decorated with fine works of art; a majestic city hall, an exchange, now disused, but gorgeously decorated with frescoes; an academy of fine arts, several private palaces, a well-endowed university, founded in 1320, with museums of antiquities & minerals, & a botanic garden, a college, public library, hospital, & lunatic asylum, 2 theatres, a ball-court, & bull-ring, a splendidly-sculptured fountain, & two celebrated gates of Etruscan architecture. Perugia has little commercial industry beyond a few soap-works, distilleries of brandy & liqueurs, & trade in wine, oil, corn, fruits, & other provisions; but its fairs in August & November, for cattle & merchandise, are frequented by a concourse of people from all parts of Central Italy, & numerous visitors are attracted to the city by its agreeable society & abundant works of art.. Pop. of deleg. 1843, 210,316.—The Lake of Perugia (Ital. Trasimeno), 10 m. W. Perugia, is situated in a basin, enclosed on every side by the Apennines. It is a fine sheet of water, about 30 m. in circ., surrounded by gentle eminences covered with oak, pine, & olive plantations, & it contains three islands.

PETERSBURG (ST.), the modern cap. city of the Russian empire, cap. gov.; founded by Peter the Great in 1703, at the influx of the Neva into the Gulf of Finland, 20 m. E. Cronstadt. Lat. of observatory 59° 56′ 5″ N., lon. 30° 19′ 0″ E. Pop. 1852, 478,437. Mean temp. of year 39°.6; winter 15°.6; summer 61°.7 Fahr. It stands chiefly on the S. bank of the Neva, but partly on some islands formed by the divergence of the river here into several branches; 9 of its 12 quarters are on the mainland. Being situated on a flat & marshy soil, it is difficult of drainage, & subject to destructive inundations. Great part of the houses are constructed of wood. Its noble public buildings, the breadth of its principal thoroughfares, & its large squares, render it one of the finest cities in Europe. The principal channel of the Neva is bordered by granite quays, & on the side of the mainland it is lined by a succession of magnificent structures, including the new cathedral of St. Isaac, the admiralty, the site of the winter palace (which was destroyed by fire in 1837), adjacent to which are the Hermitage, a palace, long the residence of Catharine II., & which comprises the court, theatre, a fine picture gallery, valuable library, & a rich museum. In the same quarter are the marble palace, city hall, senate, & several ministerial offices, the bank, post office, grand bazaar, hotel de l'état major, & the cathedral of our Lady of Kasan, built on the model of St. Peter's at Rome. Close to the quay is the fine bronze equestrian statue of Peter the Great on a huge block of granite, opposite which is a long bridge leading to an isl. having the exchange, also one of the fine public edifices. The citadel, on a small island in the Neva, contains the mint, & the cathedral of St. Peter & St. Paul, in which are the tombs of the Russian sovereigns. On an adjacent island are some outworks, & the house in which Peter the Great lived while constructing the original town. Other chief structures are the Anitchkoff & Taurida palaces, the hotel of the acad. of arts, barracks, arsenals, cannon foundry, Mikhailov palace, the vast convent of Smolnoi, numerous hospitals, & the column erected to the emperor Alexander, a granite monolith, 84 feet in height. The S. part of the city is intersected by the Fontanka & other canals, lined by fine quays. Some years ago the city was said to have 156 bridges, of which 12 were of cast iron, 31 of granite, & several suspension bridges. The 5 across the Neva, & its principal branches, are erected on boats, & annually removed before the river is frozen, which is the case for 5 months in the year. The inundations of the Neva often cause great disasters; in that of 1824, 15,000 lives were lost. The university founded in 1819, had, in 1846, 69 professors & 700 students, and here are a medical chirurgical academy of high reputation, military & theological schools, an oriental institution, school of commerce & navigation, two colleges, high & other schools for both sexes, an imperial library, with 420,000 vols. and 7,000 MSS., an academy of sciences, founded by Peter the Great, & having valuable museums, an astronomical & meteorological observatory, the imperial Russian academy, a Kalmuck institution, a geographical society, a botanic garden, & associations & public institutions of all descriptions. Manufs. of all kinds are carried on, & here are imperial gunpowder, tapestry, & porcelain factories, a cannon foundry, & near the city the extensive glass works of Osiersk. Next to London & Hamburg, it has the most important foreign trade of any city in Europe. It receives merchandise from all parts of the Russian empire & central Asia, by means of navigable rivers & canals, & one of its most characteristic features is the winter market, in which are seen enormous pyramids composed of the carcases of cattle, sheep, and hogs, fish, fowls, eggs, & butter, frozen into solid masses. Chief exports, tallow, flax, hemp, iron, copper, corn, timber, potash, canvas, & coarse linens, oils, furs, hides, & tar; imports colonial produce, cotton, and woollen goods, dye stuffs, wines, silks, woollens, hardwares, salt, tin, lead, coal, linens, &c.

PHILADELPHIA, the metropolis of Pennsylvania, & the second city in the United States of America in population & in manufactures, is in lat. 39° 56′ 39″ N., & lon. 75° 9′ 54′ W.; 107 miles from Washington, & 87 from New York. Pop. in 1800, was 70,287; in 1810, 96,287; in 1820, 119,325; in 1830, 167,325; in 1840, 228,691; in 1850, 340,045; & in 1854, 400,000. It is situated betw. the Delaware & Schuylkill rivers, 5 m. above their junction, & extends from the one to the other. The rivers bounding it lie about 2 m. apart in the narrowest place. The city is 100 m. distant from the ocean by the course of the Delaware. Its principal harbor is on the east, or Delaware river side, where ships come up, & its foreign commerce centres. Philadelphia has an extensive foreign & a still greater domestic trade, by means of railroads & canals, it possesses facilities for communication with a great extent of country. The city is built upon a plain rising gradually from the Delaware on the E., & the Schuylkill on the W., to the height of about 65 ft. above the surface of the rivers at highest water. The portion most densely built upon has an outline of about 10 miles, & extends along the Delaware r. 5 miles. Philadelphia is laid out with great regularity: the streets, with but few exceptions, crossing each other at right angles. High street extending from river to river, and Broad street which extends S. & North from Penn square, are very wide & spacious thoroughfares; the other streets are many of them neat and cleanly kept. The public buildings are generally tasty, & well-built edifices, & the private residences have a neat & cheerful appearance. It was surveyed & laid out in 1682 by Thos. Holmes; the ground selected was claimed by three Swedes by the name of Swenson, who held a title to it, obtained of the Dutch governor of N. Y. in 1664. This claim was purchased by Penn.

Public Buildings.—The Custom house, built of white marble, after the model of the Parthenon at Athens; the Pennsylvania Bank; the Mint of the United States, an Ionic structure, furnished with the most complete apparatus for coinage in its various branches; the Exchange, ornamented with Corinthian columns, & comprising a spacious hall & newsroom, the post-office, &c.; the Girard Bank; Girard College; Masonic Hall, &c., are the most remarkable for architectural proportions & beauty of exterior; but the most interesting, from its venerable appearance & historical associations, is the Old State House or Independence Hall. It fronts on Chestnut street, having Independence square in the rear. It was finished in 1734. The wings extending from it to Fifth & Sixth streets are modern. In 1744 most of the woodwork of the old steeple was taken down, being much decayed, leaving only a small belfry to cover the town-clock. The bell for the first steeple was imported from England in 1752, but was broken by accident when first put up. A new one was cast in Philadelphia, under the direction of Isaac Norris, the Speaker of the Colonial Assembly, who caused to be inscribed on it the remarkable passage from Leviticus, xxv. 10, as if prophetic of its future use. "Proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." Accordingly its joyous tones first proclaimed to assembled thousands, on the 4th of July, 1776, the completion of that charter, which marks the brightest page in the history of mankind. The chamber in which this instrument was signed, is on the first floor at the eastern end of the old building, & now presents the same appearance that it did at that time. The U. S. Navy Yard in the south part of the city occupies an area of 12 acres, & is supplied with all the modern appointments for ship building. Attached to it is a sectional Dry Dock.

Churches, Hospitals, &c.—There are in the city 225 churches, many of them fine specimens of architecture. The benevolent & charitable institutions are very numerous. One of the oldest & most respectable is Pennsylvania Hospital, founded in 1751. Its buildings are on the space bounded by Eighth, Ninth, Spruce, & Pine streets. Between the street & the building is a colossal statue, in bronze, of William Penn. The Hospital contains a fine anatomical museum, & a medical library of about 10,000 vols. The Insane Asylum, a branch of the Hospital, is about two miles west of the Schuylkill. The United States Marine Hospital, or Naval Asylum, is an elegant building on the east bank of the Schuylkill below South street. It is intended for invalid seamen. The Almshouse is on the west side of the Schuylkill river. The Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb is at the corner of Broad & Pine streets. The Pennsylvania Institution for the Instruction of the Blind is in Race street, near Schuylkill Third street. Besides these there may be mentioned the Orphan Asylum, the Asylum for Indigent Widows & single Women, Wills' Hospital for the Lame & Blind, the City Hospital, St. Joseph's Hospital, Preston Retreat, the Magdalen Asylum, Colored Orphan Asylum, St. John's Orphan Asylum, Christ Church Hospital, Friends Almshouse, Blockley Almshouse, Friends Lunatic Asylum, four dispensaries, &c.

Colleges, Libraries, &c.—The University of Pennsylvania is one of the oldest & most considerable, having been founded as a charity school in 1751; it was made a college in 1755, & a university in 1779. It has three departments, the academical, collegiate, & medical. Here instruction is given in the usual branches taught in other colleges & universities, & the usual degrees are conferred. It has a president & 7 professors, 5,142 alumni, 88 students, & 5,000 volumes in its libraries, & possesses one of the most extensive anatomical museums in the Union, a cabinet of natural history, & an excellent chemical & philosophical apparatus. Its buildings are in Ninth street, between Chestnut and Market streets. The Medical Department of the University has 7 professors, 450 students, & 5,316 graduates. The lectures commence on the first Monday in November. The Girard College for Orphans, endowed by the late Stephen Girard with $2,000,000, was commenced on the 4th July, 1833, & forms a great central temple, & there are two buildings on each side, for the accommodations of the teachers and pupils, & others for cooking & washing purposes. The buildings were completed in 1847, & went into operation Jan. 1st, 1848. Number of pupils in 1854, 325. Jefferson Medical College was founded in 1824, & has seven professors, 514 students, & 2,026 graduates. The lectures commence on the first Monday in November. Its hall is in Tenth, between Walnut & Chestnut streets. The medical department of Pennsylvania College was founded in 1849, & has 7 professors, & 150 students. Lectures commence on the 11th October, annually. The buildings are in Filbert street, above Fifth street. The Homœopathic Medical College of Pennsylvania, established in 1846. The Female Medical College of Pennsylvania, founded in 1849. The Eclectic Medical College of Pennsylvania, chartered in 1850. The Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, established in 1821, &c., &c.

The public schools of Philadelphia are numerous. At the head of these stands the High school. There is also a Normal school which has a principal & ten professors. There are about 260 schools furnishing the means of a good common school education to over 6,000 scholars.

Among the scientific & literary institutions is the American Philosophical Society, founded in 1753, principally through the exertions of Dr. Franklin. Its hall is in south Fifth street below Chestnut. It has a library of 15,000 volumes of rare books, & a collection of minerals, fossils, & anc. relics. The Franklin Institute was incorporated in 1824 for the promotion of manufs. & the arts. It holds an ann. fair, & possesses a lib. of about 6,000 vols., & an extensive reading room. The Academy of Natural Sciences has a spacious building in Broad street, a library of 14,000 volumes, and a rich cabinet of subjects pertaining to the natural sciences. The Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts was founded in 1805, & its Hall in Chestnut street contains several valuable paintings. There is also an Artist Fund Society. The Philadelphia Library, founded in 1731 by the influence of Doctor Franklin, has 35,000 volumes. To this has been added the Loganian Library, of 11,000 volumes. The Mercantile Library, established in 1822, has a collection of 15,000 volumes. The Athenæum incorporated in 1815, contains the papers and periodicals of the day, & several thousand volumes. The Apprentices' Library, established in 1819, consists of about 14,000 volumes, open for the youth of either sex. The Historical Society of Pennsylvania has published largely the Historical collections of the state. The Friends Library in Race street has about 3,000 vols., & there are several other libraries in the city.

There are in this city 15 banks, several savings' institutions, many insurance companies, &c.

The Philadelphia Museum, founded by Mr. Peale in 1784, is one of the best in the country. Many large & elegant hotels, of which the Girard house and the La Pierre house, are the most extensive. Among the places of amusement are the Walnut street Theatre, Chestnut street Theatre, and also the Arch street, and the Musical Fund Hall, capable of accommodating 2,000 persons. There are also some fine public parks planted with trees and embellished with fountains, and walks for promenade. The city is lighted with gas & supplied with abundance of market houses.

The Fairmount Water Works are situated on the left bank of the Schuylkill, two miles from the centre of the city. The process by which the city is supplied with water is by means of a dam thrown across the Schuylkill. The water power thus created acts on six large wheels, which keep in operation six forcing pumps to raise the water from the pool of the dam 92 feet to the six reservoirs on the summit of the hill. These reservoirs, which are 100 feet above the tide level, are capable of containing 22 millions of gallons. From the reservoirs the waters are distributed throughout the city in iron pipes, the aggregate length of which is about 110 miles. On the summit & slopes of the hill, neat gravel walks & staircases are arranged, and at the base of the precipice, in spaces not occupied by machinery, a garden has been laid out, tastefully decorated with flowers, shrubbery, statues, and fountains. From the summit a magnificent prospect is enjoyed of the city, the Schuylkill, and the romantic scenery of its valley. The Spring Garden and Northern Liberties Water Works are about a mile above Fairmount. Completed in 1845, at a cost of $159,074. The reservoir near the Girard College is capable of holding 9,800,000 gallons, and is elevated 115 feet above the surface of the Delaware at low water. The Laurel Hill Cemetery, on the banks of the Schuylkill, is 4 miles north of the city. Here nature seems to have lavished every variety of the picturesque and beautiful; on this secluded spot, the grounds are laid out with serpentine gravelled walks, and the whole is shaded by ancient forest & ornamental trees. At the entrance is a fine colonnade, and just within the gate is an admirable group of statuary, by Thom, representing Sir Walter Scott conversing with Old Mortality. There are several others, viz.: Odd Fellows Cemetery, Monument Cemetery, Glenwood Cemetery, Woodland, &c., all of which are tastefully laid out and adorned.

Manufactures.—This branch of the industry of Philadelphia is very important both as regards value and extent. The vicinity abounds with water power of great magnitude, & coal is obtained at an easy & cheap rate, so that steam can be applied as a motive power to a great advantage over other places, & which has been made extensively available. Machinery, locomotives, hardware, sugar refining, cordage, & a variety of wares are produced here.

A statement showing the capital invested in manufacturing, the number of hands employed, and the value of the annual product of this branch of industry, in the city and county of Philadelphia during the year ending June 30, 1850.

Coal Trade, Commerce, &c.—The coal trade during the year 1853, amounted in value to over $16,000,000, & the quantity brought to market about 6,000,000 tons. The commerce of Philadelphia is rapidly on the increase, amounting in value the same year to $14,500,000, & employing a tonnage of 252,451 tons. There are a line of first class steam-ships, & four lines of sailing vessels, plying between this port & Liverpool; 2 steamships to Charleston, S. C.; 1 to Richmond, Va., via Norfolk & Petersburg; 1 to Boston; 1 to Hartford; 2 to New York; & 1 to Baltimore. These vessels are substantial & well-built, & most of them constructed in this city. The total number of steam-ships, ships, barks, brigs, schooners, barges, &c., entering the port during the past year, was about 30,000.

The following railroads centre here:—The Camden & Amboy; Philadelphia & Trenton, connecting with the New Jersey; the Camden & Atlantic; Philadelphia & Germantown; Philadelphia, Reading & Pottsville; the Great Central railroad of Pennsylvania with its extensive connections; Philadelphia & Westchester; Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore, &c. The Schuylkill navigation canal, 108 miles long, extends to Port Carbon; and the Chesapeake & Delaware canal, 14 miles long, extending from the Delaware river at Delaware city to Back creek, Maryland. These great arteries of traffic contribute much to the trade of Philadelphia.

The city as consolidated by the act of Jan. 1854, embraces a territory 23¼ m. long and 5¼ average breadth, co-extensive with the county. It is divided into 24 wards, and is governed by a Mayor, elected for two years, a select council of 24 members for the same period, and a common council of 72 members, elected annually.

There are now published in Philadelphia 79 newspapers and periodicals, viz., 13 daily, 44 weekly, 12 monthly, and 10 bi-monthly, quarterly, and half-yearly publications. The first public journal published in Philadelphia was "The American Weekly Mercury," established in 1719, by Andrew Bradford. It was printed on a half sheet quarto paper. A number is preserved in the Philadelphia Library. In 1723, Samuel Keimer established the second paper. It was entitled "The Pennsylvania Gazette, and Universal Instructor in all the Arts and Sciences." This paper subsequently fell into the hands of Benjamin Franklin, under whose management it rapidly rose in public favor. It continued for a long series of years one of the principal papers of the day. The first daily newspaper published in the United States, was "The Pennsylvania Packet, or General Advertiser." It was first issued weekly in 1771, and became, in 1784, a daily paper. The Packet eventually passed into the hands of Mr. Zachariah Poulson, by whom it was continued under the name of "The American Daily Advertiser." In 1840, it merged into the present North American.

Philadelphia was first surveyed & regulated in 1682. It had previously been in possession of the Swedes, some of whom came into the country, bordering on Delaware bay, as early as 1627. It was named after a city in Asia Minor, & the plan is said to have been suggested by that of ancient Babylon, & according to the original design of William Penn, its original founder & proprietor, was designed to have equalled that anc. capital in extent; but the idea was soon abandoned, & the charter of 1701 restricted it to the boundaries of the late city proper. Penn's country residence was at Pennsburg Manor, above Bristol, in which was a large Hall of Audience, where he held treaties with the Indians; & the oak arm chair in which he sat, is now in the Pennsylvania Hospital. The first Congress assembled in Philadelphia, Sept. 5th, 1774, & adopted a declaration of rights; in July 4th, 1776, the declaration of independence; in the autumn of 1776, retired to Baltimore; Sept. 26th, 1777, the city fell into the hands of the British, who occupied it until the 18th of June following. May 17th, 1787, a convention met here, & in Sept. 17th, following, agreed on a constitution for the United States; when it became the seat of Government of the United States until 1800. In 1838, and also in 1844, the peace of the city was disturbed by riots. In 1854, the city & the surrounding districts were incorporated under one charter.

Pop. 1[illegible], 3,515,878, consisting of Europeans, native whites, the Papuan negro race, & independent tribes, Malay Indians, half castes & Chinese. The islands are of volcanic formation, & contain a chain of active volcanoes. Earthquakes also are of frequent occurrence. The group is within the range of the monsoons, & violent hurricanes are common. From May to September the W. coasts are deluged with rain, while the October monsoon brings rain to the E. coasts, at other seasons dry. The high temperature & abundance of moisture produce a luxuriant vegetation; so that they are capable of yielding all kinds of colonial, & probably European produce. Rice, millet, maize, sugar, indigo, hemp, tobacco, coffee & cotton are raised; & sago, cocoa nuts, bananas, cinnamon, betel, numerous fine fruits, & timber for ship building are among the products. Buffaloes & most of the domestic animals common in Europe are reared. There are no predaceous quadrupeds; the cayman is found in the rivers. Pearls, pearl oyster shell, the sea slug, edible birds' nests, & sapan wood, are important articles of export hence to China. Domestic weaving is pretty generally carried on by the females, & straw hats, segar cases & earthenwares are made; but the chief manufacture is that of "government Manilla" segars, which occupies 2,000 hands at a royal factory in Manilla. The wretched colonial policy of Old Spain excluded all foreign ships & Chinese settlers from these islands, & the trade with the Spanish dom. in America was also confined to that conducted annually by a single ship! But such restrictions have vanished since the revolution, & the colony is now making commensurate progress towards prosperity. In 1842, 149 ships, aggregate burden 46,869 tons, entered, & 162 do., burden 50,226 cleared, at the different ports. Imports amounted in value to 900,080*l.*, one third from England, & more than another third from China, the U. S. & British India. Exports amounted in value to 974,160*l.*, chiefly sent to England, Spain, the U. S., China & Australia. Manilla (which see) is the principal seat of the trade, and also the seat of the government, it being the residence of the captain-general. In each of the larger islands is a lieutenant-governor; & each of the 30 provs., governed by an alcalde, is divided into pueblos, or communes. The Roman Catholic religion has been extensively diffused among the Malay pop. Public revenue is derived chiefly from duties on exports & imports, the tobacco monopoly, & a capitation tax, which, in 1837, was paid by 1,305,142 adults, of whom 901,924 belonged to the island Luzon. Armed force amounts to about 7,000 men, 1-10th Spaniards, & the rest Malays. These islands were discovered by Magalhaens in 1521, and settled by the Spaniards in the reign of Philip II., after whom they were named.

PIEDMONT (PRINCIPALITY OF), Ital. Piemonte, N. Italy, the metropolitan & central portion of the Sardinian States, of which it now forms the divisions Turin, Coni (Cuneo), Alessandria, Aosta, & Novara. [Sardinia.] On the N.W. & S. the region is enclosed by the Alps & the Apennines, & consists of the upper valley of the Po, by which river & its affls. the Tanaro, Bormida, Clusone, Dora, Sesia, &c., it is wholly drained. Its E. part forms a portion of the great plain of Lombardy, is carefully irrigated, & of high fertility; much of it is in pasturage, & large herds of cattle are reared, as in the adjacent Milanese territory. A surplus of corn over home consumption is produced, and supplies the territory bordering on the Mediterranean as far as Toulon. Wheat, maize, barley, rice, hemp, & fruits are principal crops; wines are of inferior quality, & oil is produced only in small quantities; the silk is among the best in Italy. Mineral products comprise iron, lead, copper, marble, sulphur, manganese, cobalt, & small quantities of the precious metals. Principal manufs. are silk fabrics & organzine, hosiery, woollen & linen goods, brandy & liqueurs, glass, and iron wares. The inhabitants are nearly all Roman Catholics, except about 20,000 Vaudois Protestants in the Alpine valleys. After Turin, the cap. of the Sardinian dom., the chief cities are Alessandria, Asti, Coni, Novara, Vercelli, Pinerolo, Susa, Vercelli, and Aosta. The great routes of the Simplon, Mount Cenis, St. Bernard, & the Col de Tenda, cross the Alps into Piedmont.

PITCAIRN ISLAND, a solitary island in the Pacific Ocean, lat. 25° 3′ 6″ S., lon. 130° 8′ 00″ W., about 7 miles in circumference, elevated in the centre, with a peak at each extremity, greatest height, 1,040 feet; of volcanic origin. Soil fertile, but porous, & rather defective in water; well wooded, & climate healthful; thermometer ranging from 59° to 89° Fahr. Prevailing winds S. W. & E. S. E., but it is beyond the limits of the regular trade winds. It is surrounded by rocky shores & has only one accessible landing place at Bounty Bay. The cocoa nut, plantain, banana, and bread-fruit trees flourish, hibiscus, or cloth tree, banyan tree, orange, & others; & the potato, sweet potato, yams, water melons, pumpkin, taro, sugar cane, ginger, turmeric, tobacco, tea-plant, & maize, are cultivated. The island contained no indigenous quadrupeds, but goats, hogs, & poultry, have been imported. In 1790, this island was resorted to by the mutineers of the Bounty, consisting of 9 British sailors, 6 native Tahitian men, & 12 women. In consequence of various discords & massacres, at the end of 10 years, there remained only one Englishman, Adams, the Tahitian females, & 19 children, their offspring. Under the superintendence of this man the children were educated & trained up to habits of industry & morality. In 1825, Captain Beechey found a most interesting & intelligent colony of 66 persons. In 1831, by the somewhat imprudent sanction of the British government, the colony, numbering 87 persons, was transferred to Tahiti. After remaining 5 months there, & losing 12 of their number by death, the colony, at their own solicitation, were again reinstated in their native island. In 1849, the pop. amounted to 75 males, & 74 females, in all 149; of these, 3 were Englishmen, 1 a native Tahitian woman, the only remaining female of the original migration, & the remainder were natives of the island. They live chiefly on yams, potatoes, and other vegetables, which they raise by their own labor. Annually a chief magistrate & assistant are elected by the votes of the community. They have a church, schools, & comfortable cottages forming a village. The average number of ships which annually visit the island has been for some years about 10, chiefly American whalers, to whom provisions are supplied, in exchange for clothing, &c. The islanders speak & read the English language, are of an active robust frame of body, dark complexion, with pleasing countenances, & hospitable & engaging dispositions. From the remains of burial grounds, the island would appear to have been occupied by inhabitants at a period antecedent to the visit of the mutineers of the Bounty. It was seen by Carteret in 1767, & named by him after one of his officers.

PITTSBURG, city, port of entry, & capital of Alleghany co., Pa., is situated at the confl. of the Alleghany & Monongahela rivers, where they form the Ohio, which is here a quarter of a mile wide. It is in 40° 32′ N. lat., & 80° 2′ W. lon., 353 via Pennsylvania r. r. from Philadelphia, 247 W.N.W. Harrisburg, 226 Washington, D. C., & 2,044 above New Orleans by the course of the river. Pop. 1810, 4,768; in 1820, 7,248; in 1830, 12,568; in 1840, 21,115; in 1850, 46,601; in 1854, the city & immediate vicinity estimated at 110,000. It was originally laid out on the N.E. bank of the Monongahela, after the model of Philadelphia, with streets running parallel with the rivers, & others crossing them at right angles. The streets on the Alleghany are laid out on a similar plan, & hence a short distance from the Alleghany the old & new streets meet in oblique directions. The Alleghany river is spanned by 3 bridges, which, with several steam ferries, connect the city with the suburbs. The Pennsylvania canal crosses the riv. by an aqueduct, & there is a suspension bridge over the Monongahela.

The site of Pittsburg is a natural amphitheatre; the rivers flow in channels from 450 to 465 feet below the summits of the neighboring hills, which abound in bituminous coal, easily mined, & affords to the place the vast manufacturing facilities for which it is famed. Along the base of these hills, & some distance up their declivity, the city is built, & on every side the eye rests upon a scene of rich & varied landscape.

Among the public buildings of Pittsburg, the court-house is conspicuous. It is a handsome building of Grecian Doric architecture, 165 feet long & 100 feet deep, & the height of the dome 148 ft. from the ground. The Roman Catholic cathedral on Grant's Hill is also a a noble edifice, & many of the other churches are in the best style of ecclesiastical building. It has 46 churches,—4 Associate Reformed, 4 Baptist, 1 Disciples, 1 Congregational, 4 Episcopal, 1 German Reformed, 1 Jews' synagogue, 1 Independent, 2 Lutheran, 12 Methodist, 1 New Jerusalem, 9 Presbyterian, 3 Roman Catholic, & 1 Unitarian. It contains, besides, 4 large banking houses, several insurance offices, 3 market houses, a well-furnished museum, a theatre, numerous large & splendid hotels, railroad depôts, &c.

The means of education provided in the city are ample. In 1850 there were 36 public schools, & 10 others were being built; teachers, 71—males 19, and females 52; scholars, 5,144—males 2,583, & females 2,561; cost of instruction, $17,506, of which $2,804 was was from the State school fund, & the remainder raised by taxation. These schools are conducted under the general law. There are also other acads., seminaries, grammar schools, &c., chiefly private establishments, at which large numbers of children are educated.

As a manufacturing city, Pittsburg is second in the state only to Philadelphia. In 1850 it had 13 rolling mills, with a capital of $5,000,000, employing 2,500 hands, consuming 60,000 tons of pig metal, & producing annually bar iron & nails to the value of $4,000,000; 30 large foundries, with an agg. capital of $2,000,000, & 2,500 hands, using 20,000 tons of pig iron, & yielding articles valued at $2,000,000 annually; 2 establishments for manufacturing locks, latches, coffee mills, scales, & other iron casting, employing 500 hands & a capital of $250,000, using 1,200 tons metal, & producing annually to the value of $3,000,000; 5 large cotton factories—capital $1,500,000, hands 1,500, cotton consumed 15,000 bales, & products valued at upward of $1,500,000 annually; 8 flint-glass manufactories—cap. $300,000, hands 500, & producing various articles of glass, in the manufacture of which 150 tons lead & 200 tons pearl ash are used, to the value of $400,000 ann.; 7 phial furnaces & 11 window-glass factories—capital $250,000, hands 600, & annual products $600,000; 1 soda-ash factory, employing 75 hands, & producing annually 1,500 tons; 1 copper smelting house, producing 600 tons refined copper annually, valued at $380 per ton; 1 rolling mill, producing annually 300 tons sheathing & brazier's copper; 5 white lead factories—capital $150,000, hands 60, & producing 150,000 kegs annually, worth $200,000. There are also a number of manufactories of the smaller sizes of iron, several extensive manufactories of axes, hatchets, spring-steel, steel springs, axles, anvils, vices, mills, cross-cut and other saws, gun barrels, shovels, spades, forks, hoes, cut tacks, brads, &c. The products of the manufactures in the aggregate are valued at betw. $50,000,000 & $60,000,000 annually. There are consumed about 12,000,000 bushels of coal annually, worth $600,000, & an equal quantity is exported from the city, giving employment constantly to 4,000 hands.

As a trading mart, Pittsburg has many advantages. At the junction of two great rivers, & at the head of the Ohio, it has water communication with the whole valley drained by the Mississippi & its tributaries. With the Atlantic sea-board it has connection by means of the Pennsylvania canal & railroad, over which an immense transit & internal commerce is carried on, & it is also connected by canal with Lake Erie. Westward long lines of railroad bring it in communication with Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, &c. It is well suited for the river commerce. The "Orleans," the first steamer that plied on the western waters, was built here in 1811, since which period the commerce of the city has steadily increased. In 1850 there were owned in Pittsburg 43,476 tons of shipping, of which 44,571 tons were navigated by steam. In 1851 its steam marine amounted to 47,911 tons. This is employed on the rivers in transporting passengers & goods to the various ports. Eighteen steamers & 4 schooners (3,238 tons) were built in 1850. Tonnage 1853, 79,361 tons. The retail trade of the city is also on a vast scale. Pittsburg has also a large wholesale trade, & many western merchants make up their stocks at this point, instead of travelling to the great cities of the sea-board.

Pittsburg is divided into 9 wards, & governed by a mayor, aldermen, & common council; its police is excellent, & crime & destitution less frequent than in most other large places. The streets, stores, & dwellings are lighted with gas, which is manufactured from bituminous coal, & water is supplied from the Alleghany river by means of machinery, & distributed through iron pipes.

Old Fort Du Quesne, so celebrated in the French & colonial wars, formerly occupied the site on which the city now stands. At the close of the revolutionary war it was still but an insignificant village. In 1784, the ground, which belonged to the heirs of Penn, was laid out into town lots, & two years later the village contained about 100 dwellings. It was constituted the capital of Alleghany county in 1791. In 1796, its population amounted to 1,395.

The periodical press of Pittsburg consists of 9 daily newspapers, 2 tri-weekly, 14 weekly, 5 semi-monthly, & 1 monthly publications.

Alleghany City, the principal suburb (see p. 38), enjoys the same facilities for manufactures, commerce, & internal trade as Pittsburg, & is occupied chiefly in the same pursuits. It has 20 churches, several of them large & elegant structures. The city has a considerable commercial & manufacturing interest. Hardware & cutlery, iron work of all kinds, machinery, cotton goods, & numerous other valuable manufactures are produced. It is divided into 4 wards, & is governed by a mayor & common council.—Birmingham borough is another important suburb. PLYMOUTH, a parl. & munic. bor., seaport town, & naval station in England, co. Devon, hundred Roborough, on the E. side of a peninsula, between the rivers Plym & Tamar, at the head of Plymouth Sound, 37 m. S.W. Exeter, communicates by railroad with that city. Lat. of Mount Wise, 50° 22′ N., lon. 4° 10′ 2″ W. Pop. of bor., which comprises the suburb Stonehouse on the W. & the pa. Stoke Damerel, 1851, 52,221. The town of Plymouth stands on uneven ground, & is irregularly laid out, but the buildings have a substantial appearance. Between it and the Sound is the Hoe, a fine open space, surmounting a cliff, & on which is the citadel, a bastioned fortress, containing a governor's residence, & extensive barracks; in this direction some new & handsome streets have been laid out. Principal edifices in the town are the royal hotel, & theatre, athenæum, public library, royal union baths, Freemason's hall, exchange, new market place, guildhall, with the jail, several hospitals, & barracks. St. Andrew's church is large, & has a square embattled tower, & here are three other pa. churches. The structures connected with the naval establishments are outside of the town. The dockyard is at Devonport (which see), & is in most respects similar to that of Portsmouth, with the advantage of its various buildings being more substantially constructed of stone, and its docks, and roofings of the most solid character; it has, however, a less extent than that of Portsmouth. In it is an observatory commanding a very noble view.

The naval & royal military hospitals at Stonehouse, the victualling office at Devil's (or Duval's) point, the gun wharf, & the military prison, are all fine stone edifices. Plymouth harbor is double, consisting of the Hamoaze, or mouth of the Tamar opposite Devonport, adapted for the largest ships of war; & the Catwater, or estuary of the Plym, immediately E. Plymouth, and on which are the vills. Oreston, Hoo, Turnchapel, with various wet & dry docks, now chiefly appropriated to merchant-shipping. Plymouth has a large trade with London, Bristol, Newcastle, Newport; it imports a good deal of W. India colonial produce, & timber from the Baltic & N. America, & it has manufs. of sail cloth, refined sugar, glass, soap & starch, a large distillery, & extensive pilchard & other fisheries. Its institutions comprise a grammar & other schools, the natural history society of Devon & Cornwall, public medical, law, & theological libraries, & a mechanics' institute, & charities to about 2,300*l.* a year. It has a branch of the bank of England, & several other banks. Mkts. Monday, Thursday & Saturday. It sends two members to H. of C. Among its distinguished natives was the famous Sir F. Drake.—Plymouth Sound is an inlet of the English channel, between the cos. of Devon & Cornwall. Length 3 m., breadth 4 m. At its N.E. & N.W. extremities the Plym & Tamar rivers enter it, forming respectively the harbors opposite Plymouth and Devonport. On its E. side is Bovisand bay & on its W. are Cawsand bay & Mount Edgecumbe. Shores abrupt. It contains several islands, the principal being Mount Batten, with a fortification immediately opposite the Hoe of Plymouth. The sound has been been formed into an excellent naval harbor by the Plymouth Breakwater, a granite & marble structure built across its entrance, 1,700 yards in length, 16 do. in width at top, with a light-house on its W. extremity.

PO (Padus & Eridanus), the largest river of Italy, in its N. portion, irrigating with its affls. the entire plain of Piedmont & Lombardy, rises in Monte Viso, lat. 44° 38′ N., lon. 7° 10 E., flows at first N.E.ward to Turin, where it makes a curve E.S.E. for about 45 m., then turns N.ward to receive the waters of the Oglio, & thence flows mostly E.ward with a very tortuous course to the Adriatic, which it enters by several mouths between lat. 44° 48′ & 45° 1′ N., the principal surnamed the Po della Maestra, della Tolla, di Goro, & di Volano. Total estimated length 340 m., of which about 280 m. are navigable for large barges & river steamers. Principal affls. on left, the Chisone, Sesia, Ticino, Olona, Adda, Oglio, & Mincio; & on right, the Maira, Tanaro, Trebbia, Taro, Parma, Secchia, and Panaro. The Po is, in many parts of Lombardy, above the neighboring plains; below Piacenza it is enclosed by embankments formed by its own deposits, & carefully kept up to prevent inundations from floods. Its ordinary width averages 1,900 feet; its depth varies, according to the season, from 13 to 36 feet. Its current in the dry season is sluggish, but in spring and summer, rapid & turbulent. Its rapid stream, num. islands, & the many sand banks in its lower part, greatly impede navigation; but it is highly useful in fertilizing the country, & it abounds in sturgeons, salmon, & other fish.

POLAND (KINGDOM OF), a country of Europe, annexed to Russia, of which it forms the W. portion, comprised between lat. 50° 4′ & 55° 6′ N., & lon. 17° 40′ & 24° 18′ E., bounded E. & N.E. by the Russian govs. Vilna, Grodno, & Volhynia, from which it is partly separated by the Bug & Niemen rivers, S. by Galicia & Cracow, W. by Prussian Silesia & Posen, & N. by E. & W. Prussia. Cap., Warsaw. It is divided into 6 govs. Area & pop. as follows:—

Governments.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. 1846.
Warsaw	14,274	1,531,485
Radom	9,397	927,302
Lublin	11,975	1,018,701
Plock	6,448	547,435
Augustowo	7,266	622,195
City of Warsaw		163,597
Total	49,290	4,810,735

Of the above 4,255,241 were Christians, 554,984 were Jews, 274 Mahometans, & 236 Bohemians. Surface a vast plain, with a mean elevation of 300 to 500 feet above the Baltic, except in the S., where offsets of the Carpathian mountains rise to 1,000 feet. It is well watered, & covered with extensive forests. Chief rivs. the Narew, Niemen, Vistula, Bug, & Warta. There are many small lakes & marshes in the N.E. districts. Climate extreme. Summer very hot, mean temp. 90°; winter excessively cold, temp. 10° below zero. The soil is snow-clad & frozen for five months in the year. Soil sandy loam, resting mostly on granite; generally fertile. Agriculture has recently been much improved, & corn is exported. The chief crop for home consumption is rye. Buck-wheat, barley, & oats, are also cultivated. The grain called Danzig white wheat is grown in the S. provs. Building-timber, hemp, flax, & tobacco, are important products. The cattle & sheep are of inferior breeds. Chief mineral products, bog iron, copper, lead, zinc, & coal. The celebrated saltmines of ancient Poland are in Galicia. Nearly all the commerce is in the hands of the Jews, who form almost an eighth part of the pop. The imports in 1850 amounted to 10,161,991 roubles; the exports, same year, 5,249,804 roubles. Commerce of the interior, 6,602,681 silver roubles. In the 15th century Poland extended from Russia in the E. to Germany on the W., & from the Baltic on the N. to Turkey on the S. Its area was larger than that of France, & its population is supposed to have amounted to 15,000,000. It was then divided into Great Poland, Little Poland, & Lithuania, which was incorporated with it in 1386. At the dismemberment of Poland in 1773, the three neighboring powers, Russia, Prussia, & Austria, appropriated nearly one-third of the territory. Russia & Prussia, on the second partition in 1793, seized about half of the remaining portion, & the third partition in 1795, put an end to the republic. The last king of Poland, Stanislaus Augustus, died at St. Petersburg in 1793. In 1807, Napoleon united a great part of ancient Poland under the name of the Grand Duchy of Warsaw; this continued till 1815, when the kingdom of Poland was formed of the greater part of the former grand duchy. This state, of which the emperor of Russia was king, had a constitution, a separate army, & the use of the national language. It lasted till 1830, when a revolution took place, which terminated in 1831 by the surrender of Warsaw to the Russians, & the dispersion of the Poles. In 1832, Poland was declared an integral part of the Russian empire. A fresh attempt to restore its independence was made at Cracow in 1846, which ended in the subjugation of this last remnant of ancient Poland, and its annexation to Austria. [GALICIA POSEN.]

POLYNESIA ("many islands") includes the multitude of islands scattered over the Pacific Ocean, and comprehends a belt chiefly within 30° on each side of the equator, & from lon. 135° E. to 135° W. Including New Zealand, the boundary extends S. of the equator to lat. 47° S. The islands are distributed into numerous groups, & these groups, of an elongated form, have a general direction from N.W. to S.E., & are composed of one or more larger islands, & numer. smaller ones. The principal groups to the N. of the equator, are the Pelew, Ladrone, or Mariane, Caroline, Radack, Marshall, Gilbert, & Sandwich islands. S. of the equator are New Ireland, New Hebrides, New Britain, Feejee, Friendly, Navigator's, Solomon's, Society, Mendana or Marquesas, Low Archipelago, Cook's, Austral, & other minor groups, besides numerous detached islands, as Easter & Pitcairn islands. With the exception of Hawaii, the largest island of Polynesia, the most considerable of the others range from 20 to 60 & 100 m. in circumference, while many do not exceed a mile or two in length. These islands are all, more or less, of coral formation; the low Archipelago, Society islands, Marshall, & Carolines, presenting the regular atoll form, with circular reefs & lagoons. The Friendly, New Hebrides, Solomon's, & Sandwich islands present fringed reefs, & have active volcanoes; summits of mountains varying from 2,000 to 13,000 feet. In the lower coral islands the elevations do not exceed 500 ft. In the atoll coral isls., Darwin has supposed that a depression of surface is taking place, & that the volcanic isls. are either stationary or rising. From the great predominance of ocean, the temperature of Polynesia is comparatively moderate, the climate delightful & salubrious. Mean annual temp. of Sandwich isls. 77°; temp. of Society isls. 70° to 80°, & rarely 90°, Fahr. The S.E. tropical wind generally prevails, but N.W. & S.W. winds are not uncommon. Thunder storms & water spouts are common. Hurricanes are rare, & earthquakes slight & not of frequent occurrence. The refreshing coolness of the trade winds, & a regular but not excessive supply of moisture, are favorable to a luxuriant vegetation. Soil in the valleys & in the river courses a rich volcanic mould: on the mountains less fertile. Both vegetable & animal productions are limited as to number of species. In the islands of the middle & eastern divisions not more than 500 species of plants are found. This number increases towards the W. & N.W. The bread-fruit, peculiar to this region, the cocoa, banana, plantain, banyan, sugar-cane, yam, & cotton-plant, paper-mulberry, & a species of chestnut, are indigenous. Other trees & plants of tropical climates have been introduced & flourish; & arrow-root, sweet potatoes, the common potatoe, & maize, are now reared abundantly. There are several timber trees, especially sandal-wood, a few spices, & ornamental flowers, which, however, have little odor or decided color. The islands were all remarkably deficient in animals, thus indicating their isolated & comparatively recent origin. Hogs, dogs, & rats were the only quadrupeds; snakes or other reptiles are confined to Navigators' group; vampire bats are found in some of the isls. Land birds are not numerous, owls, parroquets, pigeons, & some passerinæ forming the most remarkable; wild ducks, & other water fowls are more plentiful. Turtles resort in great numbers to many localities, & fish are plentiful on the coasts. Several species of whales, the cachalot or sperm whale, Cape whale, hump back, & black fish are peculiar to the seas of the Pacific, & their capture has been the chief inducement for ships visiting these regions. Oxen have been introduced from New S. Wales, and thrive well; & horses from S. America. The natives of Polynesia are in general a well-formed, tall, active, & intelligent people. There are two distinct races, one apparently of Malay origin, by far the most numerous & intellectual, & spread over all central & eastern Polynesia, & speaking one common language, though varying in dialects. The other a negro or Papuan race, with negro features & color, & crisped mop-like hair, growing in separate tufts, speaking a distinct language, & exhibiting an intellect of an inferior grade, probably the first settlers of the islands, & now confined to the W. part of Polynesia, & inhabiting partly or wholly New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon isls., New Caledonia, New Hebrides, & part of the Ladrone isls. In some of the isls., there is a partial intermixture of the two races, & in others an apparent Caucasian intermixture, indicated by the ample beard & prominence of the features. Some of the western isls., as the Ladrones, were discovered by Magalhaens in 1521, the Marquesas by Mendaña in 1595, but it was not till 1767 that Wallis, & subsequently Cook, explored & described the leading islands of this region. Soon after this, missionaries began to settle in the islands, & after many discouragements, at last have succeeded in promoting Christianity & civilization in some of the principal islands; though cannibalism & savage ferocity still prevail in the majority. In 1844, there were 45 American & British missionary stations in Polynesia, the principal being in the Sandwich islands, Tahiti, & Society isls., Friendly isls., Feejee isls., New Hebrides, & Hervey isls. The pop. of these islands varies continually from wars, migrations, & occasional pestilence. Tahiti & some others when first discovered, were conjectured to be greatly more populous than at present, but no proper data exist for affording even an approximation to the real numbers. Probably the pop. of the whole of Polynesia does not exceed 1 million or 1 million & a half. [For further information, see the individual groups & islands.]

N. of the Apennines, it is watered by the Lamone, Savio, Marecchia, Metauro, Esino, Musone, Potenza, Chienti, and Tronto, small torrents from the Apennines; & the N. frontier is traversed by the chief branch of the Po: all tributaries to the Adriatic. The principal lakes are those of Perugia, Bolsena, Albano, and Bracciano; and the marshes of Comacchio, and Pontine marshes. The territory is traversed longitudinally by the chain of the Apennines, of which the highest point, within its limits, is Monte Velino, 8,210 feet. In the N., it comprises part of the great plain of the Po, & in the S.W the undulating plain called the Campagna di Roma, terminating in the Pontine marshes, noted for insalubrity. The climate varies greatly in different quarters. In the legations, situated on the N. of the Apennines, opposite the snow-clad Alps, the winter is severe, while in the S. the climate is very mild, except in the mountain districts; and the region of the Campagna of Rome would be a blooming garden, but for the fatal effects of the miasma, which forces the cultivators of the soil to seek refuge at night in the few scattered towns near its borders. The mean temp. of the year at Rome is 60° 4; warmest month 76°; coldest month 45° Fahr. The soil is generally fertile, but neglected; it is calculated that only one-third of the superfices is under cultivation; much of the surface affords excellent pasturage, which is occupied by great herds of buffaloes. Considerable flocks of sheep and many horses are reared; great numbers of hogs roam in the forests of the Apennines. Agriculture is conducted in a very slovenly manner, and the implements are of the rudest kind. The chief crops are wheat, maize, pulse, hemp, wine, oil, & tobacco; oats, barley, and rye are grown in the N. legations; in the extreme S. sugar, indigo, & cotton, are cultivated to a small extent, and cork trees are numerous. The wines are of inferior quality. Chestnuts form a considerable article of food. There are in the states mines of iron, lead, sulphur, alum, vitriol, & other volcanic products, but they are all nearly unproductive, except the sulphur mines near Rimini. Salt is made in the lagoons Ostia, Comacchio, & Cervia, to the amount of more than 84,000,000 pounds annually. The fisheries are mostly conducted by the inhabitants of the Kingdom of Naples. Manuf. industry is confined to the large cities and for home consumption; it comprises silks, leather, gloves, paper, musical strings, iron & glass wares, a few cotton goods at Rome, crape & sausages at Bologna, cordage, soap, cream of tartar, & glue. Comm. limited, and conducted chiefly with the Mediterranean states. In the Pontif. sta. there were, in 1847, 9 archbishopries, 52 bishopries, 13 abbacies, 1,824 monasteries, & 612 convents. Secular clergy were estimated at 35,000, monks 10,000, nuns 8,000. Education is conducted in universities, colleges, seminaries, & elementary schools. The seats of the seven universities are Bologna, the most ancient & celebrated in Italy, Rome, Perugia, Ferrara, Camerino, Urbino, & Macerata, the last 4 founded in 1824; in 1841 these were attended in all by 2,400 students. The proportion of students in the state schools was only 1 in 50. No general provision is made for the education of the lower orders, and the instruction imparted is very inferior in quality. The government was, till recently, an absolute elective monarchy; the Pope, chosen by the college of cardinals from their own body, was at the same time the head of the universal Romish church, & a temporal sovereign. Previous to the 7th century, the popes were only bishops of Rome; the basis of their temporal power was laid by the successive donations of Pepin, Charlemagne, and the emperor Henry III., but was consolidated only in the 16th cent. At the French revolution of 1790, the popes lost their possession of Avignon & Venaissin, & in 1797 their domain was further diminished by the legations ceded to the Cisalpine republic. In 1808, Napoleon divided the other states betw. the kgdm. of Italy & the French empire, but in 1814, all these territories were restored to the Pope, except Avignon. In 1847, Pope Pius IX. established a constitutional parliament, consisting of 99 deputies popularly elected, but the revolution of 1848, which commenced by the assassination of Count Rossi, 15th November, has overturned these arrangements. At present (1850) there is no settled government, the pope is absent from his dominions, & affairs in Rome are conducted partly by cardinal legates, and partly by the French military authorities. The papal forces were governed by a board, whose head was a prelate; in Jan., 1853, they comprised 21,059 men, including the Swiss guard. Value of imports, 1851, 10,598,261 scudi; of exports same year, 9,733,464 scudi. Public revenue derived from taxes on land & provisions, customs, & lotteries, amounted in 1853, to 11,346,311 Roman scudi; expenditure, 12,487,412 scudi; deficit, 1,141,101 scudi. The interest of the public debt, in 1851, amounted to 4,300,000 Roman scudi.

PORTSMOUTH, p-t., & port of entry in Rockingham co., in N. H., is situated in 43° 5′ N. lat., & 70° 45′ W. lon. from Greenwich, & 6° 23° E. lon. from Washington. It is 14 m. E.N.E. from Exeter, 24 N. from Newburyport, 45 E.S.E. from Concord, 54 S.S.W. from Portland, 54 N. from Boston, & 493 from W. The population in 1810 was 6,934; in 1820, 7,327; in 1830, 8,082; in 1840, 7,887; in 1850, 9,738. It is the only seaport in the state, situated on a peninsula on the S. side of the Piscataqua river, 3 m. from the ocean. The situation is pleasant & healthy, the land rising gradually from the harbor. It is well built, & many of the houses are elegant. It has a fine harbor, with 40 feet of water in the channel at low tide, & is protected by its islands & headlands from storms. The Piscataqua, opposite the t., is from one-half to three-fourths of a mile wide; & the tide, which here rises 10 feet, flows with so rapid a current as to keep the harbor free from ice. The main channel is on the E. side of Great island, or Newcastle, & is defended by Fort Constitution, on Great island, & Fort McClary, in Kittery, opposite. There are also Fort Sullivan and Fort Washington on two other islands, which are not garrisoned in time of peace. There is also an entrance on the S. side of Great island, called Little Harbor, but the water is shallow. There is a light house on Great island. This island contains 458 acres, and constitutes the t. of Newcastle, & it is connected to Portsmouth by a bridge erected in 1821. Portsmouth is also connected to Kittery by 2 bridges, one of which is 1,750, & the other 480 feet in length. On Continental or Navy I., within the bounds of Maine, & opposite to Portsmouth, is the navy yard belonging to the United States, which has every convenience for the construction of vessels of the largest class. The t. is supplied from a fountain 3 miles distant, with pure water, brought by a conduit, which was laid by a company formed in 1799, & distributed through the principal streets. Among the public buildings are 8 churches,—1 Baptist, 1 Christian, 1 Congregational, 1 Episcopal, 1 Methodist, 1 Roman Catholic, 1 Unitarian, & 1 Universalist,—3 banks, with an aggregate capital of $453,000, a fire insurance company, a savings' bank, a court house, 2 market houses, an academy, an athenæum, & an almshouse. The Episcopal church is a spacious and elegant brick edifice, from the cupola of which there is a fine view of the town, the r., the islands, & the surrounding country. The athenæum, a very flourishing institution, was incorporated in 1817, and has a library of more than 5,000 volumes, besides cabinets of minerals & of natural history. Ship building & other manufactures are carried on to a considerable extent. The cod & other fisheries are actively prosecuted, & Portsmouth has considerable foreign & coasting trade. The tonnage of the port in 1853 was 26,645 tons. There were 150 stores, 2 steam cotton fac., with 26,192 spindles, and employing 210 persons, 2 iron foundries, a brass & a copper foundry, a carriage fac., a cordage fac., 2 ship yards, 2 tanneries, 3 harness fac., 4 boot & shoe fac., a piano fac., 1 daily and 3 weekly newspapers pub. This town was first settled in 1623, & was incorporated by charter in 1633. It suffered less than most other places from the attacks of the savages in early times. Surrounded on three sides by water, the neck which connects it with the main land was defended by a stockaded fence, by means of which savage aggression was easily resisted. This place has been at different times severely visited by fires. In December, 1802, 102 buildings were burned; in December, 1806, 14 buildings, including St. John's Episcopal church, were destroyed; in December, 1813, a more desolating fire swept over 15 acres, destroying 397 buildings, of which 100 were dwelling-houses. The parts which were burned in these fires have generally been rebuilt with brick, in an improved form.

PORTSMOUTH, p-t., Newport co., R. I., 7 N.W. Newport, 24 S.E. Providence, 417 W., occupying the N. part of the island of Rhode Island. Surface moderately elevated; soil a fertile gravelly & argillaceous loam, adapted to grass and to grain. Being surrounded by water on three sides, it enjoys great facilities for navigation, & its fisheries are valuable. Its vessels are chiefly employed in the coasting trade. Coal & plumbago are found, & some salt is manufactured. Several adjoining islands are attached to this t., the largest of which is Prudence, 6 miles long, and three-fourths of a mile wide, the soil of which is excellent. Portsmouth is connected with Tiverton by a bridge, & with Bristol by a ferry. There are in the t. 2 churches, a fulling m., a woollen fac., 5 grist m. Pop. 1840, 1,706; 1850, 1,833.

PORTSMOUTH, a parl. & munic. bor., fortified seaport town, pa. & the principal naval station of England, co. Hants, hund. Portsdown, at the S.W. extremity of Portsea island, & at the entrance to its famous harbor, 22 m. S.E. Southampton, 95 m. S.W. London on the Brighton & S. coast railroad, besides which, it is reached by a branch of the London & S.W. railroad. Lat. of observatory 50° 48′ 0″ N., lon. 1° 16′ W. Area of pa. 172 ac. Pop. 1851, 10,329; do. of bor. 72,096. The town, which is the most perfect fortress in Great Britain, is enclosed by bastioned ramparts, faced with masonry, planted with elms, surrounded by trenches and out-works, and entered by 4 carriage ways. It has a good main street, & much of the town is well built & improving, though many of its by-streets are of a very inferior character, & its houses & public buildings are nearly all of brick. On its W. side is an insular quarter termed the "Point," bounding its commercial port, and a seat of very active traffic in time of war: in this quarter, facing the mouth of the harbor, some very extensive additions have been recently made to the fortifications between the "Platform" and the "Round Tower." Principal buildings within the walls are the pa. church with a cupola & vane 120 feet in height, garrison, gov. house, town hall & jail, new mkt. house, marine & other extensive barracks, the buildings of the philosophical society, new alms-house, Green-row ball-rooms, the theatre, work-house, & some large breweries. It has 44 churches—11 Baptist, 2 Bible Christians, 1 Brethren, 12 Episcopal, 6 Independent, 1 Jews' Synagogue, 7 Methodist, 1 Mormon, 1 Roman Catholic, 1 Unitarian, and 1 isolated congregation. The town of Portsea forms it N. suburb, separated from it by the mill-dam creek, but enclosed within an additional line of fortification connected with those of Portsmouth. [Portsea.] Within this town is the naval dock-yard, containing basins, wet & dry docks, large warehouses, anchor forges, iron & copper mills, rope-houses, & every department necessary in the construction & outfit of ships of war. In the dock-yard are also the royal naval college, a chapel, & the residence of the port admiral; the area added to it on the N.E. is intended partly for the formation of building docks for war-steamers; upwards of 2,000 workmen are employed in this yard. Between the dock-yard & the town of Portsmouth is the gun-wharf or arsenal, containing an armory with 20,000 stand of small arms, extensive artillery and ammunition depôts, & good quays bordering on the harbor. E. of the town ramparts and out-works, are Southsea common & the suburb of Southsea, now frequented in summer as a watering place; on the shore facing Spithead & the Isle of Wight are Southsea castle, and further E.ward Cumberland and some other forts, which, with Blockhouse & Monckton forts on the mainland S.W., protect Spithead & the approach to the harbor. Besides Portsea & Southsea, the large suburb of Landport, which extends almost to the centre of Portsea island, is included in the bor., on the extreme limits of which are the barracks of Tipner & Hilsea. Haslar hospital & the victualling department at Gosport, are dependencies of this port. Public institutions comprise a free grammar school, St. Paul's academy, a mechanics' institution, savings' bank, general hospital, female penitentiary. Portsmouth communicates with Chiches- & London by a large canal, with Gosport by a floating bridge across the mouth of the harbor, by steam-packets with Ryde, Cowes, Southampton, Plymouth, Havre, & Dublin. Principal imports, coal, cattle, & sheep from W. Engl., corn & provisions from Ireland, & timber & wines from the continent. Market, Tuesday, Thursday, & Saturday. It sends 2 members to H. of C. Polling place for S. division of co.—Portsmouth Harbor is an inlet of the Engl. Channel, W. of Portsea island, about 4 m. in length by 5 or 6 m. in greatest breadth. At its entrance it is only 220 yards across, but within it the whole British navy might ride in perfect security. A new basin for steamboats was completed in 1848. It contains several small islands, & on its shores, besides the town & establishments of Portsmouth and Portsea, are Gosport, Fareham, and Portchester.

Entire Pop. of Portugal and Colonies, 6,163,258.

The surface has a general inclination from N.E. to S. W. It is traversed by several mountain ranges, chiefly prolongations of the Spanish mountains.—I. the Serra Estrella, a continuation of the Serra de Gata, highest point 7,524 feet in elevation.—II. the Serra de Montchique, a continuation of the Sierra Morena. N. & S. of these extend fine plains, watered by the Minho, the Douro, Tagus, & Guadiana, which enter the country from Spain, & with the Mondego & the Sadao, rising in Portugal, all flow W. to the Atlantic Ocean. The largest plain is that of Alemtejo, S. of the Tagus. There are no lakes in Portugal, but several salt marshes. The coast line, 500 m. in extent, presents along its shores, many fine harbors. The climate, in general healthy, is especially so in the elevated coast regions, & on the plateaux of the interior; the exceptions are the vicinity of the salt marshes, & parts of the banks of the Tagus & Mondego. Mean temp. of year at Coimbra 62°; Lisbon 61°.3 Fahr. Rain is very abundant on the W. coast; the greatest amount falls between Oct. & April. Snow is very rare in the S. provs., but falls heavily on the mountains of the N. provs.; it lies permanently on Mount Gaviari (prov. Minho), 7,865 feet in elevation. Earthquakes occur frequently in the S., & in the vicinity of Lisbon. The soil is naturally rich, & the country picturesque. Husbandry is conducted in the most slovenly manner,

& there are few passable roads. Wheat, barley, oats, flax, & hemp, are cultivated in the elevated tracts, rice in the lowlands, olives, oranges, lemons, citrons, figs, & almonds, in the Central & S. provs., & at the S. extremity, the American aloe, the date, & other tropical plants. The cultivation of the vine is the most important branch of industry, & the produce of the vineyards, watered by the upper Douro, termed port, is the staple export. There are extensive forests of oak in the N., chestnut in the centre, & the sea pine, kermes & cork in the S. The olive oil is of inferior quality. Mules & asses are the chief beasts of burden, oxen are used for draught in the provs. Cattle & sheep are reared in considerable numbers, but the wool is not of fine quality. Goats & hogs are numerous, and fish abound in the rivers & on the coasts. Iron, marble, & salt, are the chief mineral products; the mines of tin, lead, & antimony, are not worked. There are numerous salt marshes on the coast, & 200 mineral springs are enumerated. The manufs. are very limited, chiefly arms & porcelain, at Lisbon, woollens at Portalegre & Fundao, cotton spinning at Thomar, jewellery & trinkets at Lisbon & Oporto, glass at Marinha-Grande, paper at Alemquer, silks at Braganza & at Campo-Grande, near Lisbon. The trade of the country is mostly conducted by the English and other foreigners. The government of Portugal is a constitutional monarchy; the religion of the state is Roman Catholic, but Jews are tolerated. The church is governed by a patriarch, 3 archbishops, & 14 bishops. The inquisition was abolished in 1821, & its enormous revenues have been applied to state purposes. Educational establishments are very defective, with the exception of the capital, which contains extensive libraries, an observatory, & several literary & scientific institutions. Portugal, which forms the greater part of the ancient Lusitania, was successively conquered by the Romans in the 2d century B. C., by the Visigoths in the 6th century, by the Arabs in 712 & 715, & afterwards by the Christians of Spain. In 1139, Alphonse Henriquez, son of Henry of Burgundy, having gained a victory over the Moors at Ourique, was proclaimed the first king of Portugal. In 1348, one half of the pop. died of the plague. The dynasty of Burgundy governed the country till 1580. About this period the country rose to the highest point of political and commercial splendor. The Portuguese discovered the greater part of the W. & S. coasts of Africa, and the maritime route to India, & founded numerous colonies; they also took possession of Brazil, & retained it till 1826, when it finally separated itself. On the invasion of the French in 1807, the royal family went to Brazil. From 1827 to 1833, the throne was usurped by Don Miguel; in 1836 several changes were introduced, & the existing constitution was established. The once flourishing & vast colonies of the Portuguese are now reduced to the following territories:—

POTOMAC, r., Md. & Va., rises in 2 branches, the N. & the S. in & near the Alleghany mntns., & forms, through nearly its whole course, the boundary between Virginia & Maryland. It is 550 miles long, & enters Chesapeake bay between Point Lookout & Smith's point, by a mouth 10 miles wide. At Alexandria it is 1 mile & a quarter wide, 290 miles from the ocean. It is navigable for ships of the line to the navy-yard in Washington, 300 miles from the sea, & 3 miles below the head of tide water. Above this it is obstructed by numerous falls & rapids. Little falls are 3 miles above Washington, with a descent of 37 ft., around which is a canal, 2½ miles long with 3 locks. Great falls are 8½ miles above this, & descend perpendicularly 76 feet, around which is a canal of 5 locks. Six miles above are Senaca falls with a descent of 10 feet. Shenandoah falls, 60 miles above, are at the passage of the river through the Blue Ridge. Houre's falls are 5 miles above. Canals have been constructed around all these falls. From the mouth of Savage river, which enters the Potomac at Westport, to Cumberland, 31 miles, the fall is 445 feet; from Cumberland to the Shenandoah falls, 130 miles, the fall is 490 feet; at the Shenandoah the fall is 43 feet in 5½ miles; from the Shenandoah to Great falls, 40 miles, 39 feet; & thence to tidewater 12 miles, 143 feet. The whole descent from the mouth of Savage river to tidewater, 219 miles, is 1,160 feet. The principal places on the E. side of the river are Georgetown, Washington, Port Tobacco, and Leonard Town; on the W. side, Harper's Ferry and Alexandria. Its principal tributary is the Shenandoah, 200 miles long, & navigable 100 miles, which enters it on the S. side from Virginia, immediately before its passage through the Blue Ridge. This passage is a great curiosity. Of it Mr. Jefferson says, "the passage of the Potomac through the Blue Ridge is, perhaps, one of the most stupendous scenes in nature. You stand on a very high point of land. On your right comes up the Shenandoah, having ranged along the foot of the mountain a hundred miles to seek a vent. On your left approaches the Potomac, in quest of a passage also. In the moment of their junction, they rush together against the mountain, rend it asunder" (referring to a possible event of former time) "& pass off to the sea." His whole description is sublime and beautiful, of a scene which he pronounces "worth a voyage across the Atlantic" to behold. The Potomac is 42 feet deep at it mouth, 30 at St. George's island, and 18 feet at Swan's point, & thence to Alexandria. It has near its entrance into the Chesapeake, 2 light houses, and 2 light vessels, each of the latter have fog bells attached.

PROVIDENCE, city, the principal port of entry, & semi-capital of Rhode Island. Situated in 41° 49′ 22″ N. lat., & 71° 24′ 48″ W. long. from Greenwich; and 1° 23′ 24″ East lon. from Washington. It is 30 miles N. of Newport; 42 miles S.S.W. from Boston; 70 m. E. of Hartford; 173 miles E. of New York, & 396 from Washington. Population in 1820, 11,767; in 1830, 16,832; in 1840, 23,171; in 1850, 41,513; 1854, 50,000. In point of population & wealth Providence is the 2d city in New England. Its present limits contain about 9 square miles. The compact portion of the city is built on both sides of the Providence river, over which are constructed two broad & substantial wooden bridges, above which the river expands into a broad and beautiful cove. On the E. side are three principal streets, running nearly parallel to the river & cove; viz., Water street, Main street, & Benefit street. On the W. side are two principal streets; viz., Westminster & Weybosset streets. The two parts of the city are connected by Market st., including Weybosset Bridge, & are well lighted with gas. The principal public buildings, including Brown University, the Athenæum, the State House & public offices, are on the E. side of the river. The population and business on the two sides are nearly equal. The public buildings of interest are the State House, of brick; the several edifices of Brown University, of brick & stone; the Athenæum, of stone; the Friends Yearly Boarding School, a spacious edifice of brick; six spacious Grammar Schools; & one High School, of brick; the State prison & county jail, in one; the "Dexter Asylum" for the poor, situated in the E. suburbs of the city, large & liberally endowed; the "Butler Hospital" for the Insane, in the same vicinity, and attached to which are spacious grounds; the institution is liberally endowed.

There are 35 church edifices, viz.,—10 Baptist, 4 Congregational, 4 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 6 Methodists, 1 New Jerusalem, 2 Roman Catholic, 1 Seaman's Bethel, 1 Second Advent, 3 Unitarian, & 2 Universalist. Several of these present fine specimens of architecture, & add much to the beauty of the city. The buildings of Brown University occupy a beautiful & commanding situation on Prospect street, at the head of College street, on the E. side of the river. They are four in number, besides the mansion of the president. Of these, University Hall & Hope College are occupied by the students, & are large buildings 4 stories high; of the other two, one is called Manning Hall, & is used as the Chapel & as the University library. The other, which is named Rhode Island Hall, is devoted to the uses of the Departments of Chemistry and Natural Science. It contains two commodious Lecture rooms, & a valuable cabinet. The university has a president, professors, & instructors, 1,784 alumni, 243 students in the several classes, & 31,000 volumes in its various libraries. The college library of itself contains 20,000 well-selected volumes. The apparatus for the natural sciences is extensive & complete, & the standard of instruction in all the depart. of the institution is high. The commencement is on the first Wednesday of Sept. By the charter the president and a majority of the trustees are Baptists, though other denominations are also required to be represented in its Boards. The university was founded in 1764, & has conferred great benefit on the State of Rhode Island, & upon all New England. Adjacent to the Halls of the University, directly to the north, is the Cabinet of the R. I. Historical Society. It is a chaste & commodious edifice, erected in 1844 for preserving the memorials of the history of the state. The Athenæum possesses a well-selected library of nearly 15,000 volumes, to which large & substantial additions are annually made. The Arcade on the west side, though not strictly a public building, deserves to be mentioned as one of the finest of its kind in the United States. It extends from Westminster street to Weybosset, 225 feet, is three stories high, has 82 shops, or ware rooms, & is devoted chiefly to the dry goods retail trade. It is built of massive dressed granite, with two imposing Doric porticoes, one fronting on either street. There are in Providence 26 banks with an aggregate capital of $10,419,690; a savings' bank; 3 insurance companies, with a capital of $390,000, besides several mutual insurance companies without specified capital.

The manufactures of Providence are extensive, & in 1850 employed a cap. of $3,026,364, & manuf. articles to the value of $5,534,901. There are in the city four bleaching & calendering establishments, bleaching 18 tons of cotton cloth per day, including printing cloths, & employing 500 hands. There are printed each week, 13,000 pieces of cloth, or 390,000 yds., employing 500 hands. There are four cotton mills of 34,000 spindles, which make 58,000 yds. of cloth per week, employing 730 hands. Two woollen mills manufacture 375,000 yards of satinets and jeans, consuming 126,000 pounds of wool annually—employing 120 hands. There are two screw factories, that manufacture annually 700 tons of iron, employing 475 hands. Fourteen furnaces, consuming 5,000 tons of pig-iron for machinery, turn out 14,000 parlor, cooking, & counting-room stoves, & 550 ploughs, employ 272 hands. There are three steam-engine establishments, for building steam-engines, employing 240 hands. One rolling-mill employs 275 hands, makes 30 tons railroad iron, & three tons of wire, per day from pigs and blooms. One edge tool, nut & washer factory, manufactures annually 31,200 dozen plane irons, 100 tons hinges, 300 tons bolts, 200 nuts, 100 tons pick-axes & other forges—95 hands. One factory, for manufacturing shoe-ties, corset-lacings & braid, employs 37 hands, & consumes 1,200 pounds of cotton per week. Four planing machines plane 10,000,000 feet of lumber annually; make 75,000 boxes for goods, cradles, & sofas, & 100,000 sash-lights—employ 400 hands. Eight engraving shops for engraving copper rolls for printing cloths—80 hands. Three butt-hinge factories employ 50 hands, and manufacture annually 100,000 dozen hinges. There are in this city five brass foundries, & seventeen tin & sheet iron shops; 16,000 weaver's reeds are manufactured from steel wire; 1,200 men are employed in making cotton & woollen machinery; 500 house carpenters, & 350 stone & brick masons, here find employment. There are 65 steam engines in operation. There is paid annually for labor in the manufacture of jewellery over $100,000.

Providence possesses great commercial facilities, which have been well improved. The harbor, at the head of Narraganset Bay, 33 miles from the ocean, is spacious, and has sufficient depth of water for the largest ships. Somewhat more than 100 vessels belong to the port. The registered tonnage in 1853, was 16,361 tons. Two lines of packets ply regularly to New York; two to Albany; one to Philadelphia; & one to Baltimore. A railroad 41 miles long extends from Providence to Boston, with which it is connected during the season of navigation, being 10 months in the year, with a daily line of steam-boats to New York. A railroad extends also from Providence to Stonington, 48 miles, connected also with a line of boats to New York. A third railroad to Worcester, 43 miles, & the Providence, Hartford, & Fishkill, connects the city directly with the trade & travel of the West. In addition to these lines a daily steam boat runs down the Bay to Fall River, and another to Newport. Few cities in the Union possess happier facilities than this, for intercourse with the sea-board and the interior.

Providence was first settled in 1636 by Roger Williams, who was banished from Massachusetts on account of his religious opinions, and who adopted in his new establishment the principles of universal toleration. It was incorporated as a town in 1649. It suffered considerably in the Indian war of 1675. In September 23, 1815, a southeasterly storm drove an unusual tide into the harbor, raising the water 12 feet higher than the usual spring tides, spreading devastation & ruin along the wharves, destroying the bridge, demolishing one church, overturning houses & stores, & doing immense damage to the shipping. The total loss was estimated at over a million of dollars. In 1831, Providence was chartered as a city, & is governed by a mayor, six aldermen, & twenty-four common councilmen.

Prussia is composed of two distinct, & very unequal portions, separated by the territories of Brunswick, Hesse, Waldeck, Lippe, & Nassau. The E.most and largest portion, or Prussia E. of the Weser, is bounded E. by Russia, S. by Austria, Saxony, & Electoral Hesse, W. by Brunswick, Hanover, & Mecklenburg, & N. by the Baltic Sea. The W. portion, or RHENISH PRUSSIA (Rhein Preussen), is bounded E. by H.-Darmstadt, Nassau, Electoral Hesse, Waldeck, Brunswick, Lippe, & part of Hanover; S. by France, Rhenish Bavaria, & parts of Oldenburg & Hamburg; W. by the Netherlands, Belgium & Luxemburg; & N. by Hanover. Besides these great portions, Prussia possesses some small dists in the duchies of Saxony & the princips. of Hesse. The distance between the E. & W. extremities of Prussia, is 715 m.; the E. portion is 550 m. long, E. to W., & 185 to 435 m. broad, N. to S., & the W. portion 250 m. in length, N. to S., & 45 to 120 m. in breadth, E. to W.

The surface of Prussia is in general flat, except in the W. (prov. Saxony), where it is traversed by parts of the Harz mntns. & the Thüringerwald, & in the S. between Silesia & Bohemia, by the Riesen Gebirge, or Giant mntns. The E. provs. belong to the basin of the Baltic, in which the chief rivers are, the Memel, or Niemen, the Pregel, Vistula & Oder, with its affluent the Warta. The W. provs. belong to the basin of the North Sea, & are watered by the Elbe, & its affluents the Saale, Havel, & Spree, the Weser, Ems, & Rhine, with its affluents the Moselle & Lippe. The canal of Bromberg connects the Vistula with the Warta, the canal of Finow unites the Oder with the Havel, an affluent of the Elbe; & the canal of Frederick William connects the Oder with the Spree. The Rhine, which is here navigable for large vessels, & is celebrated for its picturesque beauty, separates Rhenish Prussia into two nearly equal parts, each of which has an elevated table-land & a low plain; the chief part of the table-land lies N. of the Moselle, on lt. b. of the Rhine, & is called the Eifel & the Hohe Veen, 1,600 feet in elevation. This region is of Basaltic formation, intermixed with tracts of lava; it presents evident traces of volcanic action. On the rt. b. of the Rhine, the table-land forms the elevated ridge of the Taunus, mean elevation about 2,000 feet, culminating point the Feldberg 2,850 feet; this table-land extends N. between the rivers Lahn & Sieg, where it is called the Westerwald, mean elevation 1,600 feet. The coasts of the Baltic are covered with extensive lagoons, the principal of which are the Curische-Haff at the mouth of the Niemen, the Frische-Haff at the mouths of the Vistula & Pregel, & the Stettiner-Haff at the mouth of the Oder. The E. provs. are remarkable for the great number of lakes they contain; of these, Lake Spirding has an area of 20 sq. m., & Lake Mauer is nearly as large. The islands of Prussia are Rügen, Usedom, & Wollin, in the Baltic. The climate of Prussia, generally temperate & salubrious, is humid & cold in the N., but in Rhenish Prussia it is warm enough for the production of excellent wine. Mean temp. of year in E. Prussia (Prussia proper), lat. 50° 30′, at an elevation of 40 feet, 43°; Central Prussia, lat. 52° 30′, elevation 210 feet, 48°; Rhenish Prussia, lat. 51°, elevation 250 feet, 49°.5 Fahr. Mean annual fall of rain, in the W. provs., 20 inches, decreasing towards the E. Prevailing winds W. & cold, often severe. The soil is fertile in many places, & grain is produced in sufficient quantity for the dense population, & is even exported to a considerable extent. The most fertile dists. occur along the course of the Niemen & Vistula, on lt. b. of the Oder, & on the Elbe, where the vicinity of Magdeburg is so fertile that it is called the granary of Berlin. The most barren region is the Tucheler Heide, in the prov. W. Prussia, 50 m. long & 25 m. broad, which is covered with sand, interspersed with stunted shrubs. The cap. is situated in an extensive sandy plain, which is interspersed with fertile tracts, & covered in some places with fine forests. Agriculture, which forms the chief source of national wealth, is carefully conducted; the principal crops are wheat, rye, oats, barley, flax, hemp, hops, & tobacco; fruit is not widely cultivated. The vine is cultivated in Rhenish Prussia, on the banks of the Moselle & Rhine, & to a small extent in detached districts of Central & E. Prussia. The pasturage is excellent; sheep, cattle, & horses, of improved breeds, are extensively reared; & wool is an important product. Goats are numerous in the mountain dists. of Silesia & Saxony; swine in Pomerania, Saxony, and Westphalia, which last is celebrated for its hams; wild boars, stags, fallow deer, hares, & rabbits, are plentiful, as are wolves & foxes; bears are seldom met with. The lynx, beaver, badger, otter, weasel, & marten, are common, but the ermine is rare. Wild geese are extremely numerous. Bees are extensively reared, & the breeding of the silk worm has recently assumed importance. Mines of iron, copper, & lead, are worked in the provs. of Rhenish Prussia & Westphalia, & in the Harz mountains; the mountains are well wooded, & contain marble & some of the precious stones. Amber (a government monopoly) is found on the shores of the Baltic. The manufactures of Prussia are very extensive, and have recently become important; the chief branches are linens, in all the provs.; woollen cloths, & cottons, in Rhenish Prussia, at Barmen, Crefeld, & Elberfeld, silk stuffs, iron founding, carriage building, saddlery, chemical products, sugar refining, & brewing. The porcelain of Saxony, called Dresden china, is much esteemed. Commerce is very active in Prussia, & has been greatly developed by the establishment of the commercial customs union (Zollverein), by the many navigable rivers, excellent roads, and canals; & by railroads, which extend from the capital in all directions [BERLIN], connected with which, are 5 great lines of telegraph extending to the chief points of the frontier. The chief exports are the productions of the soil & the manufs. of the country. Imports colonial produce, cotton, silk, tobacco, printed calicoes, silks, &c. The pop. of Prussia comprise two principal races,—I. the Germans, who form the majority,—and II. the Slavonians in the grand duchy of Posen, in Prussia proper, & in a part of Upper Silesia. The government is a hereditary monarchy; the authority of the king is absolute, but modified by provincial estates, & further by a constitution, granted 1847. Calvinism is the religion of the royal family, & of the majority of the people, but all sects are tolerated. Of the pop. (1846), 9,855,583 were Protestants; 6,046,292 Roman Catholics; 1,977 Greek church; 14,531 Menonites, & 214,867 Jews. Public instruction is more developed in Prussia than in any other country of Europe; except Saxony, it possesses the celebrated universities of Berlin, Halle, & Bonn, besides those of Breslau, Griefswalde, & Königsberg; & numerous literary & learned societies. The system of education established by the government, is of a thoroughly practical nature, and is considered the most complete and efficient in Europe. The different classes of schools are—I. the elementary school, at which the great majority of the people receive their education.—II. the city school, which is always attached to a gymnasium.—III. the gymnasium, in which Latin & Greek are taught. In most of the small towns are normal schools for the training of teachers. The universities are all under the control of the government. In 1843, there were in all 25,597 schools in Prussia, of which 23,646 were elementary schools. Attendance at school is compulsory. In the middle of the 13th cent., the Teutonic knights subjugated E. Prussia, & converted the people to Christianity. Albert of Brandenburg, grand master of the order, appropriated the country in 1525; his family augmented these possessions; & Frederick, one of his descendants, obtained the title of King in 1701; he acquired the principality of Neuchâtel, in Switzerland. By the treaty of Utrecht, William I. obtained a portion of the duchy of Gelders, he acquired the duchy of Limburg, & took from Sweden the greater part of Pomerania. Frederick II. (the Great), conquered Silesia, which was abandoned by Austria in 1742; this king & his successor took part in the dismemberment of Poland, & thus acquired the grand duchy of Posen. By the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, Prussia was deprived of all her possessions between the Rhine & the Elbe, and the greater part of Prussian Poland; but in 1815, after the fall of Napoleon, the Congress of Vienna restored all these estates, except a part of Poland, & at the same time granted to Prussia a part of Saxony, & the duchy of the Lower Rhine.

Military service for 3 years is imperative on all the male pop., who subsequently form the landwehr, the 1st battalion of which is composed of men from 25 to 32, & the 2d, men from 32 to 39 years of age. The landsturm comprises all others capable of bearing arms between the ages of 17 & 50. In 1853, the standing army was 225,550; the landwehr, 1st bat. 174,616, 2d bat. 175,196 men. The navy consists of 51 vessels, carrying 188 guns, & in time of war 3,120 men. Public revenue 1853, 99,568,776 thalers; expenses same year, 103,029,671 thalers; debt 1853, 220,276,491 thalers.

PUNJAB, an extensive territory of N.W. Hindostan, embracing the country watered by the "five great waters," of which the Indus is the most westerly and the Sutleje the most easterly. The outline of the dist. is angular, the apex being at the point where the Indus & the Punjnud meet, in lat. 28° 55′ N., lon. 70° 28′ E. The N. is an elevated region, formed by the Bolor, Tibet, & W. Himalaya mntns., & from whence issue six rivers, which flow S.wards through a level & low lying region. The rivers are the Indus, Jhylum, Chenab, Ravee, Beas, & Sutleje. Length from N.E. to S. W., from Nobra in Ladakh to the confluence of the Indus & Punjnud, about 600 m. Breadth from Rampur to Derbend, 350 m. Pop. estimated at 4,740,000, consisting of Sikhs, Cashmerians, & Afghans. The N. part of the state is a range of mountains, with elevation from 20,000 to 27,000 feet. The W. range, enclosing the valley of the Indus, is of granite & primary rocks. The Rupshu Spiti & adjacent part of Ladakh, are of secondary strata, with organic remains; the E. Cashmerian are volcanic & basaltic, with limestones. S. of lat. 34°, the country rapidly slopes to the alluvial plain of the Punjab, which extends for several hundred miles without any considerable eminence except the salt ranges at the base of the Himalaya, which contain immense beds of rock-salt, as also alum, sulphur, nitre, coal, & gypsum. The great plain is divided by the intersections of its rivers into 5 doabs. The soil in general is sandy & barren, but with many fertile spots intermixed, & there are abundant means of irrigation. Summer temp. of the plains excessively hot & dry; winter cool, & not unfrequently frost. Temp. at Lahore in June, in the shade, 112° Fahr. The vegetation of the Punjab resembles that of E. India. The sugarcane, palm, orange, & other fruit trees flourish, & all kinds of grain crops are raised, as also opium, indigo, tobacco. Camels, buffaloes, horses, are reared in the extensive pasture lands, but rural industry is by no means generally practiced. Silk & cotton fabrics are manuf. in the towns, as also carpets, shawls, & warlike arms. A considerable transit trade is carried on in goods imported from eastern India & carried westward; bullion, silk, drugs, & dyes being received in return. The population is of a mixed kind. In the N. are Tibetan Mongolians, & the remains of former Afghan conquerors are scattered over the whole country; the great majority of the people are Punjab Jats, descendants of Hindoo Rajpoot Jats; the Khalsa Sikh population may amount to 500,000. Their religion, originally supposed to have been a pure deism, is now a modification of Hindooism; they have no castes, & the military profession is open to all. Their morals are depraved and sensual. In person the Sikhs resemble the Hindoos, but are of more robust & active habits than the natives of Middle India, and they excel in warlike enterprise. The Sikh government, a military despotism, extended over the whole of the Punjab, Kashmir, Ladakh, and Bulh, Peshawer W. of the Indus, & the Derajat as far S. as the frontier of Scinde. The revenue was formerly estimated at about 2½ millions ster. annually. Runjeet Singh had an army of 75,000 men. Principal towns, Lahore the cap., Amritzir, Serinagur, Mooltan, Peshawer, Jullinder, Jelalpoor. The Punjab was the scene of Alexander the Great's oriental conquests. At the beginning of the 10th century, it was overrun by Mahommed of Ghuznee "the destroyer;" subsequently it was conquered by the Afghans, and in 1526 by Baber the Mogul conqueror. Under the late Runjeet Singh, the power and boundaries of the kingdom were greatly extended; on his death in 1839 and the subsequent massacres of his nearest heirs, the country became the scene of anarchy. An unprovoked invasion of the British territories E. of the Sutleje by a powerful army of the Sikhs in 1845, led to a series of British victories at Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sabraon, and their submission by treaty in 1846. This treaty was again broken by Shere Singh in 1848, and the Sikh force was finally defeated & dispersed at Goojerat, 21st February, 1849. The Punjab was then formally annexed to the British possessions in India.

PYRAMUS, a riv. of Asia Minor. [JYHOON.]

PYRENEES, Pyrenæi Montes, an extensive mntn. chain of Europe, forming the limit between France and Spain, and extending in a direction S.S.E. to N.N.W., from Cape Creux, on the Mediterranean, in the E. to near Fuenterrabia on the W., a distance of 270 m., with a breadth of from 50 to 100 m.; they are joined on the W. by the Cantabrian mntns., which may be considered a prolongation of the chain. Next to the Alps, the Pyrenees are in general the highest mntns. of Europe; the summit of the chain forms a curved line with the main altitude of 7,990 ft. The slope is much more gentle on the N. than on the S. side. On the N. side they send off numerous off-sets which cover parts of the French deps.; & the descent is more gradual at the W. than at the E. extremity. The primary formation is less extensive than in the Alps; it consists of granite, micaceous schist, and primitive limestone, which form a continuous band, stretching three-fourths across the isthmus. The bulk of the system is composed of secondary rocks, which are arranged in vertical bands flanking the older rocks, and consist of clay-slate, grauwacke, and blue limestone. The oolite and chalk formations occur on the lower part of the chain. Snow lies deep in the mountains during a great part of the year, and is perpetual on the higher points. The elevation of the snow line is 8,000 ft. From the Marbore to Maladetta, the summits are covered with broad bands of ice, yet no true glaciers have been discovered. Corn grows in some of the upper valleys, maize is cultivated at the vill. of Lescar (Lower Pyrenees) at an elevation of 3,280 ft., and the pine tree grows at 10,870 ft. above the sea. The bear is found in the high desert regions near the snow line, and the lynx ascends to 8,500 feet. The principal summits are Pic Nethou (Maladetta), 11,168 ft.; Mont Perdu, 10,950 ft.; the Vignemale, 10,820 ft.; Pic du Midi, 9,540 ft.; and Le Canigou, 9,137 ft. The principal passes of the Pyrenees are from E. to W. Port de Oo, 9,843 ft.; the Breche de Roland, 9,500 ft.; Estaula, 8,402 ft.; Tourmalet, 7,143 ft.; Gavarnie, 7,654 ft., above the level of the sea; there are about 50 in all, of which the following are fit for carriages:—I. The Col de Pertus, between Perpignan and Jonquera, passable at all seasons.—II. The pass of Puymorien, between the valley of Segre and that of the Ariège.—III. The Port de Confranc, between Zaragoza and Pau.—IV. The Port of Roncevaux, between Pamplona and St. Jean.—V. The pass of the Bidassao, between Vittoria and Bayonne. The chief rivers rising in the Pyrenees, are the Adour, Garonne, and Aude, flowing N. and the Llobregat, and numerous affls. of the Ebro flowing S. The Pyrenees contain iron-ores: copper, and argentiferous lead-ore were formerly worked, but are now abandoned. Several of the streams are auriferous, but no gold or silver mines are worked. The valley of Cardona contains a remarkable deposit of rock-salt, one of the beds measuring 390 by 750 feet. The Pyrenees give their names to 3 deps. of France.—I. Basses (or lower) Pyrenées, a frontier prov. formed of part of the old prov. Bearn, bounded E. by the dep. H. Pyrenees, S. by the Pyrenees, W. by the Bay of Biscay, on which are the ports of Bayonne and St. Jean-de-Luz, and N. by the deps. Landes and Gers. Area, 2,928 sq. miles. Pop. 1851, 446,997. Cap., Pau. Nearly half the surface is covered with pastures and marshes; one-sixth part is occupied by fine forests, and the rest is fertile. Numerous torrents descend from the mountains, the chief of which are the Gave-de-Pau, Gave d'Oleron and the Nive. Minerals comprise iron, copper, and marble. The mineral springs of Eaux-Bonnes and Eaux-Chaudes are well frequented, and the salt from the springs of Salies is in repute. Among vegetable products are the oak, gall-nut, lint, and wine; and among animals, the bear, isard, a species of chamois. Manufs. unimportant: the chief are iron-forging, manufs. of linen and paper. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Bayonne, Mauleon, Oloron, Orthes, and Pau.—II. Hautes (or upper) Pyrenées, a frontier dep S.E. of the former, composed of part of the old prov Gascogne, having E. the dep. H. Garonne and N. Gers. Area, 1,800 sq. m. Pop. 1851, 250,934. Surface covered by the ramifications of the Pyrenees, enclosing the fine valleys of Adour, Campan, Barréges, Cauterets, and Azun. The Adour, and its affls., the Arros and Gave-de-Pau, rise in the dep.: the soil contains numerous minerals, but only marble is quarried. The mineral springs of Bagneres, Barréges, and Cautertes are much frequented. Soil fertile in the valleys, but grain is insufficient for the wants of the population. Wine is abundant, and of good quality. Cattle are extensively reared: horses are excellent, and the sheep are protected from the wolves by the powerful dogs of the Pyrenees. The chief manufs. are those of woollen stuffs, called Barreges. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Argeles, Bagneres, and Tarbes.—III. Pyrenées Orientales, is separated from the former by the dep. Ariège, and bounded E. by the Mediterranean, N. by the dep. Aude, and comprised in the old prov. Roussillon and part of Languedoc. Area, 1,593 sq. m. Pop. 1851, 181,955. The Pyrenees in the S. separate the dep. from Spain, and connect it with their centreforts; the highest point in the dep. is Canigou, 9,137 ft. Chief rivers the Tet, Gly, and Aude, flowing E. to the Mediterranean, the Ariége, affl. of the Garonne, and the Segre, affl. of the Ebro. On the coast are the marshes of Leucate and St. Nazaire, and the ports Collioure, Port Vendres, Bagnols, and Nouvelle. The soil contains iron, antimony, fine marble, and mineral springs. Climate cold in the mntns., but sufficiently mild in the valleys for the culture of the pomegranate and the mulberry. The orange grows here on espaliers. The wines of Roussillon are esteemed. Manufs. are unimportant. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Ceret, Perpignan, and Prades. The Australian Pyrenees is a name given to a range in the colony of Victoria, between the Austrian Alps & Grampians, their principal summits being Mts. Cole, Byng, and Campbell.

Pop. 61,526.

QUEBEC, city, seaport, & capital of the Canadas, & of the British possessions in N. America. Situated on the left bank of the River St. Lawrence, at the point where it is joined by the St. Charles, about 340 m. from the sea. Lat. 46° 49′ 12″ N., lon. 71° 15′ 45″ W. Pop. in 1830, 27,562; in 1852, 42,000; & in 1854, 45,000. The Quebec & Richmond r. r. connects it with the Grand Trunk r. r., distance to Montreal, 169 m., to Portland, Me., 317 m.

It is built on the extremity of a ridge terminating in the angle formed by the junction of the two rivers, in the point called Cape Diamond, which here rises to the height of about 340 feet above the St. Lawrence. The cape is surmounted by the citadel, & the city extends from it principally in a N.E. direction, down to the waters' edge. The old town, which lies wholly without the walls, partly at the foot of Cape Diamond, & around to the St. Charles, has narrow, & in parts, steep streets. The ascent from the lower to the upper portion of the city which crosses the line of the fortifications, is by a winding street & by a flight of steps; the streets in this section, though narrow, are generally clean, and well-paved or Macadamized. The public buildings & most of the houses are built of stone. Quebec is very strongly fortified, & has been called the Gibraltar of America. The citadel, on the highest point of Cape Diamond, embraces an area within the fortifications, of over 40 acres, & is formidable alike from its position & its works, constructed on a gigantic scale, & on the most approved principle. The line of the fortifications stretches nearly across the peninsula on the W., and runs along a ridge between the upper & lower parts of the city. It is intersected by 5 gates, & has an inner circuit of about 2¼ m. Beyond the ramparts on the W. are the extensive suburbs of St. Roch, St. John, & St. Louis. Durham Terrace commands a picturesque view, having the lower part of the city in the foreground, & the shores & waters of the St. Lawrence extending far in the distance. The Public Garden on Des Carrieres st., contains an elegant monument erected to the memory of Wolfe & Montcalm. It is 65 ft. high, & its design is very chaste & beautiful. The Place d'Armes, in which the government offices, the Episcopal cathedral, & the court house are situated. The Esplanade, railed off from, & situated between D'Auteuil street & the Ramparts, afford delightful views of the surrounding scenery.

Public Buildings, &c.—The Parliament House (destroyed by fire, 1853), was an elegant pile of buildings, forming three sides of a square, now about being rebuilt in a much improved style. The Court-house & City Hall are substantial stone edifices, St. Louis st., upper town. The Marine Hospital, a fine stone building, will accommodate 400 patients. The Lunatic Asylum at Beauport, 2½ m. from the city, is an extensive building, enclosed in a park of 200 acres. The Quebec Musical Hall, recently erected, is a substantial & well-built edifice, fitted for musical entertainments, &c. The Quebec Exchange, the Canadian Institute, the Literary & Historical Society, the Quebec Library Association, the Advocates' Library, &c., are among the most noted & interesting institutions of Quebec.

There are 174 streets in the city & suburbs, the principal of which are the following:—St. John street, the principal seat of the retail trade; St. Louis street, occupied by lawyers' offices & private dwellings, is handsome & well-built; D'Auteuil street, facing the Esplanade in the upper town, & in the lower town, St. Peter street, in which most of the banks, insurance companies, & merchants' offices are situated. There are also many other fine streets, & the appearance of the city has been much improved since the great fire of 1845, when nearly 2,000 buildings were destroyed, which have been replaced by others of a superior description. The streets are lighted with gas, & the city is well supplied with water from the St. Charles river.

The Roman Catholic cathedral is a large & commodious building, but with no great pretensions to beauty of architecture. The interior is handsomely fitted up, & has several fine paintings; the church will seat 4,000 persons. It has a fine choir & a good organ. The Episcopal cathedral is a handsome edifice, 135 by 75 feet. It was erected in 1804, & will seat between 3,000 & 4,000 persons. Trinity church is a neat stone building, erected in 1824; it is handsomely fitted up. St. Andrew, Presbyterian church, is 95 by 48 feet, & will accommodate about 1,200 persons. There were in 1852,—1 Baptist, 1 Congregational, 4 Episcopal, 1 Free Presbyterian, 2 Methodist, 1 Presbyterian, & 5 Roman Catholic churches. Quebec has 2 banks, and several bank agencies, 2 savings' banks, a reading room, & 9 newspapers are published.

There are 3 nunneries, one of which, the Hotel Dieu, is a very valuable hospital; the nuns acting as nurses to the sick in these establishments, & as instructresses of young females. There are numerous religious & benevolent institutions, an exchange, a board of trade, a literary & historical society, a mechanics' institute, &c. Among the establishments for educational purposes, the first place is due to the university of Quebec; it has a principal, & professors of theology, rhetoric, & mathematics, with five regents for the Latin & Greek classes. Here is also a grammar school, a classical academy, a national school, & many French & English private schools, & an institution for the advancement of learning within the province.

Though not a manufacturing town, Quebec has various distilleries, breweries, with tobacco, soap & candle works, and numbers of fine ships have been launched from its yards. The markets are well stocked with most sorts of produce, except good fish, which is scarce & dear. The climate, though on the whole good & healthy, is extremely hot in summer & cold in winter. The majority of the population is of French extraction, & the French language is mostly spoken in the best circles, & the Roman Catholic religion predominates.

Vessels of the largest burden come up to the wharfs of Quebec. Its harbor or basin between the city and the island of Orleans is of great extent, having in general about 28 fathoms water, the tide rising from 16 to 18 ft. at neaps, & from 25 to 30 ft. at spring tides.

There are extensive flats between the lower part of the city, & the St. Charles, where wet docks might be advantageously constructed. The commerce of the city is very extensive. It engrosses almost the entire trade of the province. Quebec has a regular intercourse, by means of steamers, with Montreal & other ports higher up the St. Lawrence, and with Halifax & other ports on the Atlantic.

Quebec was taken from the French in 1759. A British army, under Gen. Wolfe, having effected a landing near the city, attacked & defeated the French army under Montcalm, on the heights of Abraham, to the W. of the city. Wolfe fell in the moment of victory, and Moncalm, who was also mortally wounded in the action, expired soon after. The French, panic-struck by the loss of the battle, & the death of their commander-in-chief, surrendered the city before even a single battery had been opened against it. A monument was erected in 1827, in the gardens of the chateau, inscribed to the "Immortal memory of Wolfe & Montcalm." The city is divided into six wards, & is governed by a mayor & 19 councillors, elected by house-holders paying an annual rent of $45, or owning real estate valued at $20.

RED, r., La. & Ark., & is the first large r. which enters the Mississippi 341 above its mouth, & rises at about lat. 34° N. in the Llana Estacada or Great Staked Plain. It is formed by several head branches, & receives several tributaries, the largest of which are Blue r. & False Washita. A greater part of its course is through rich prairies of a red soil, which colors the water of the r., & hence the origin of its name. Its shores are covered with grass, & abound with grapevines, which produce an excellent fruit. About 100 m. above Natchitoches commences what is denominated the Raft, which consists of a swampy expansion of the r. to the width of 20 or 30 ms., & has a length of 60 or 70 m. The r. divides into a great number of channels, many of which are shallow, & these channels have been obstructed by fallen trees, brought down by floods from its upper parts. At a great expense, this raft has been so far removed by the U. S. government, that steamboats pass through it. Boats sometimes pass the raft by leaving the r. above it, in a channel which flows out of it into some neighboring lake, and following the outlet of this lake, until it joins the r. below the raft. This raft has been a serious obstruction, as the r. would otherwise be navigable for steamboats 400 m., & the lands on its borders are highly fertile, & desirable for cultivation for a great distance above the raft. Below the raft, & 4 m. above Natchitoches, the whole volume of the r. is again united, but very soon divides into many channels, & fills an immense number of bayous & lakes, that lie parallel to it. In its lower parts, the main channel of the r. is narrower than above the raft.

RED RIVER, of the North, rises in a small lake, Minnesota. Lat. 47° N., flows a short distance south & west, & finally turns north, & passes into the Hudson Bay ter., & finally enters Lake Winnepeg, after a course of about 400 m.

The town, though anc., is pretty well built. It has two churches, a modern grammar school, union workhouse, elegant clock tower, reading room, branch bank, and a small theatre. It is connected with Hayle by the West Cornwall railr.

RED SEA, or ARABIAN GULF, an inland sea between Africa and Asia (Arabia), lat. 12° 40′ to 30° N., lon. 32° 30′ to 43° 30′ E. Length N.W. to S.E. upwards of 1,400 m.; breadth varies to nearly 200 miles. At its S. extremity it communicates with the Indian Ocean by the strait Bab-el-Mandeb. In its N. part it bifurcates into the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah, which enclose the peninsula of Sinai. Depth varies, average about 100 fathoms. It abounds with islands & coral reefs, and is supposed by some to have derived its name from the large quantities of red coral and pink-colored fuci which it yields; while it is more probably derived from the anc. Idumæ, "sea of Edom," or "red sea." The country almost everywhere around it is mntnous. The S.E. monsoon blows constantly for 8 months of the year, and during the remainder, the N.W. monsoon. From Oct. to May, when S. winds prevail, the water rises in the N. part of the sea, which then attains an elev. much higher than the Mediterranean. The navigation is difficult owing to sudden changes of wind and heavy gales. Principal ports are Mocha, Hodeida, Loheia, Jiddah, and Yembo on the Arabian side, and Suez, Kosseir, Suakin, and Massowah on the Egyptian, Nubian, & Danakil coasts. The Jews and Phœnicians appear to have carried on an extensive trade upon this sea, and after the destruction of the Persian empire, it resumed importance as the principal route of traffic between Europe and the East, which distinction it retained until the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. It has again recovered some of its anc. consequence, as part of the direct route between Europe and India. [Aden, Bab-el-Mandeb. Suez, Isthmus of.]

RHINE (German Rhein, anc. Rhenus), an important & celebrated river of Europe, is formed in Switzerland, by the union of two small streams, the Hinter & Vorder Rhein; the first springs from the glacier of Rheinwald, & the second rises on the N. side of Mt. St. Gothard, at a height of 7,650 feet; these meet at Reichenau in the cant. Grisons. The united stream flows generally N. past Mayenfield, & enters the lake of Constance on the S.E. near Rheineck; at Stein it quits the lake at its W. extremity, flows W. past Schaffhausen, and Laufenburg, separating Switzerland from Bavaria. At Basle, where the Upper Rhine terminates with an elevation of 755 feet & a breadth of 550 feet, it turns to the N., & flows past Breisach and Strasbourg, Speyer, & Mannheim, where its bed is 300 feet above the sea, between the territories of Baden on the E., & France & Rhenish Bavaria on the W. From Worms to Mayence, it traverses the Hesse territories. At Mayence it receives the Main, & flows W. to Bingen, where it turns to the N.W., passing Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne, & Düsseldorf (near which it attains its greatest breadth, 2,300 ft.), Wesel & Emmerich, where its course is again westerly, till entering the Netherlands it reaches the N. sea by several branches, having a delta larger than that of any other European river. [Netherlands.] The principal affls. of the Rhine are on right, the Kinzig, Neckar, Main, Lahn, Ruhr, Lippe; & on left, the Thur, Aar, Ille, & Moselle. From Chur to Basle, the Rhine is only partially navigable, on account of the rapidity of its current, the numerous rocks which impede it, & its waterfalls, the greatest of which is at Laufen near Schaffhausen, where it falls 80 feet. From Basle to the sea, the navigation for steamers & large barges is continuous. In the Netherlands it is connected by canals with its sev. branches & with the sea. The great N. canal unites it to the Meuse & the Néthe, affls. of the Scheldt; & the canal of the Rhône & Rhine in France connects it with the Rhône by the Saône. In Bavaria it communicates with the Danube by means of the Main, & the Altmuhl & Ludwigs canal. The direct distance of the Rhine from its source to its mouth is 360 miles; following its windings it is about 600 miles, and its basin comprises an area of 65,280 sq. m. The Rhine gives name to 3 circles of Baden, to a prov. of Hesse Darmstadt, a prov. of Bavaria, 2 deps. of France, & a prov. of Prussia. Rhine Confederation. [Germany.]

RHINE (LOWER & UPPER), two old circs. of Germany.—I. on lt. bank of the Rhine, now comprised mostly in H.
